WORLD CHANGES AFFECT FUTURE OF OUR COUNTRY

Russian Overthrow of Absolutism Viewed With Concern at Washington—Solidarity of Entente Not Threatened is Belief—R. R. Strike Most Serious Problem for U. S.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 16.—Kaleidoscopic changes in world affairs, now in process, yet may seriously affect the future of the United States, officialdom admitted today. The next few weeks must be fraught with momentous happenings, they say, which may force radical action at a dozen points by this government.

Administration officials are seriously concerned with the outlook. They hope for the best, of course, but are leaving nothing undone to protect the interests of the nation.

Naurally developments in the Russian revolution were today overshadowing all else. Officials were inclined to believe that the outcome there will be beneficial to the cause of the Entente nations. They asserted that for the first time in generations the Russians themselves are in control of their government. Monarchial and aristocratic corruption and degeneracy have overreached themselves, officials say, and Russia has finally overthrown absolutism.

It is believed here that with the advent into office of the new Duma and the representatives of liberal thought in Russia that there will be a general resumption of the offensive against Germany. This offensive, official reports reaching here during the past two months, have pointed out, has been held back by inefficiency—and possible corruption—on the part of certain Russian leaders. These men now have been relegated to obscurity. Some of them face trials by courtmartial and death at the rifles of a firing squad. And it is expected that in their places will be brought forward competent officers who will lead.

In this very connection it is recalled that only a very short time ago experienced Japanese soldiers who had been detailed to train the Russian units were forced out of the service by the direct orders of Czar Nicholas. With him deposed these officers are likely to return to their former posts.

Administration officials say that German suggestions that the revolution in Russia and the parliamentary crisis in France will lead to a breaking down of the solidarity of the Entente are without foundation. They expect that the war will continue as heretofore with the exception that Russia will prove more powerful.

R. R. Strike Most Serious.

The gravest question confronting the United States today was the threatened railway strike. If it is permitted to be put into effect it will enormously hamper preparedness plans. In addition, officials who know what is planned, declare that freight schedules will be so disarranged that it will require weeks and possibly months to restore normal conditions after the strike is adjusted.

Transfer of buildin materials from manufacturing establishments to the various shipyards will be stopped. Massing of needed supplies for the army and navy cannot be completed. In a score of ways, officials say, a strike at this time would hamper development of the national defense and army and navy officials alike have urged that nothing be left undone that would prevent it.

The "Fate of Fryatt."

The threat made by Germany through the Munich Neueste Nachrichten that American naval officers and men who shall act as gunners on American merchantmen will have meted out to them the fate of Captain Fryatt of the British steamer Brussels, shot for resisting a submarine attack has had the effect here only of incensing naval officials. That Germany would do this if she was able to capture the "armed guard" of American liners is generally credited. But it is pointed out that this would mean that the United States would be able to institute a policy of reprisals when the certain hostilities followed which would be far-reaching in their nature. The threat, administration officials declared, will in no way interfere with the putting into effect of the president's policy of armed neutrality.

Rush Work on Navy.

Meanwhile work on the great naval contracts awarded by Secretary Daniels last night will proceed night and day. While these contracts for the construction of the four greatest battle cruisers in the world and six scout cruisers call for expenditure on hulls and machinery of nearly $112,000,000, the actual money payments will be larger. The navy department has authorized night and day work and overtime allowances will be met from the fund made available at the last session of congress. Both classes of cruisers embrace the last word in shipbuilding and each vessel will make at least 35 knots.

Gardiner Man is Ill.

John S. Rosekrans of Gardiner, has been seriously ill with blood poisoning this week. Only a few days Mr. Rosekrans narrowly escaped asphyxiation when he fell asleep in a room where there was a defective coal stove.

BRITAIN CHEERED BY THE REVOLUTION

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

London, March 16.—The success of the Russian revolution and the formation of a new government is greeted with enthusiasm by officials and the public in London. Officials see in the new order of things a marked efficiency for the conduct of the war.

Dispatches filtering through from the Russian capital today made no mention of what disposition has been made of Czar Nicholas, who abdicated in the hour of the revolutionists' triumph. Pity and sympathy are felt here for the throneless monarch. It is felt that he has always bent his will to his pro-German empress and the aurocratic heads of his government. The London press sees in his abdication an act of patriotism.

One despatch states that the czar has gone to Petrograd from the front but there is no indication as to what became of him after that. It is not believed here that any bodily harm has or will come to him.

One report reaching London said the czar was "under arrest." It gave no details.

The empress and her three daughters are understood to be under guard, although not actually under "arrest." It is also reported that she is in flight, but this is believed untrue.

Every incoming despatch from Russia lends new color to the sensational events of the past week.

The Duma declared itself flatly when the czar refused to intervene in the economic crisis. Thereafter it notified the military heads in the capital of its decision.

General De Knorring was ordered to arrest the national council. He refused to do so, it is reported, and armed himself to resist any forceful attempt to summon him before the duma members. With his janitor he repaired to his housetop and there opened fire on the revolutionists, killing two of them. After a short interchange of shots the general was killed and his body thrown into the river by the outraged guardsmen.

One of the first and most strategic moves of the new government was the seizure of the hated Kreaty prison, in which hundreds of political prisoners were confined. Many of them were waiting transportation to Siberia and the living death that follows there. All the prisoners were liberated, the revolution quickly armed them and they joined the revolters to a man.

The new government today is rapidly consolidating the various political factions which joined in the revolt. The new cabinet was formed with this in view. It is properly described as a "coalition" cabinet and contains members of every political faith. The Socialists, who as late as Tuesday threatened to oppose the formation of the new government, have come to terms.

The satisfaction at the course of Russian events was widespread throughout England today. For a long time it has been an open secret that the government has not been satisfied with Russia's course.

Officials are supremely confident that the new government will unite in pushing the war to a successful conclusion. A Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer, summed up the official attitude when, in communicating news of the revolt to the House of Commons, he said:

"There is comfort for us in the comparative tranquility with which this change was effected. There is also real comfort that all of our information shows that the movement was not, in any sense, directed toward an effort to secure peace for Russia.

"In fact, quite the contrary is true. The discontent was not against the government for carrying on the war, but for not carrying it on with the efficiency and energy which the people wanted and expected."

There is a general disposition in London to blame the empress and the reactionary ministers of the czar's cabinet rather than the monarch hmself. The empress was markedly pro-German rathen than the monarch himself. Before her marriage she was a German princess, Alix of Hesse-Darmstadt. She is believed to have exerted a tremendous influence over the czar's advisors.

M. Sturmer and M. Protopoff, two of the most powerful ministers in the old cabinet, who are reported to have been killed, were also accused of being pro-German and hated by the masses because of it.

Officials here privately express profound satisfaction at their being deposed.

Business and Religion.

On Sunday night at the popular service in the St. James Methodist Church, the pastor, Rev. Dr. T. H. Baragwanath, will ask and try to answer the very practical question: "Can a Kingston Business Man be a Christian?" The following Sunday night the question will be: "Can a Rich Man Enter the Kingdom?" There will be attractive music by the large chorus choir.

To Have a Look at Hospital.

Members of the Kingston Rotary Club have been invited by Major Chandler to make an inspection of the Kingston City Hospital next Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock. The Rotarians will give an hour over to making a thorough survey of the plant and its equipment, afterward adjourning to their usual weekly luncheon at the West Shore Hotel.

AFTER THE TORNADO IN NEW CASTLE, INDIANA.

Forty persons were killed and more than 200 injured in the tornado and cyclone which swept through Newcastle, Indiana. Damage caused to the city was estimated at $1,000,000. This photograph was made at Eighteenth and C avenue and shows the roof of a building which was picked up, carried several blocks and blown to the roof of another building.

DROWNED LANDS CASE NEARS END

The Geiger-Divine case took up the entire session of supreme court on Thursday afternoon when the defense swore a number of witnesses. The case will probably be finished today and be sent to the jury. The witnesses sworn on Thursday, and in fact all during the trial, have been old residents of the town of Wawarsing in the neighborhood of the "drowned lands" and but few of them have not passed three score and ten. Men who had worked in the neighborhood years before the great Civil War and who could remember when the country was covered with timber lands were called. Many of them had worked at cutting down the timber and floating it down to tidewater.

The cases on the day calendar are No. 49, A. D. Hill against the Commercial Travelers Mutual Accident Association of America, an insurance action.

No. 56, Philip Schantz against John A. Lampman, a negligence action growing out of an automobile accident near Ulster Park.

No. 60, Max Cohen against Miller's National Insurance Company, to recover on a fire insurance policy.

No. 64, A. Ray Powley against A. R. Powley, action for services rendered.

No. 5, F. E. Carter, as admx., against the village of Rifton, a negligence action.

No. 24, Charles Buley against Robert J. Schaffer, personal injuries growing out of an automobile accident.

No. 28, Henry W. Osborne against Arthur Van Steenburgh, a negligence action growing out of an automobile accident.

No. 40, Jacob Weber against Jacob Raskin and another, an action on contract.

No. 52, Samuel G. Simons against I. Abramson and another, an action on contract.

No. 69, Max Cohen against Miller's National Insurance Company, an action on fire insurance policy.

WOULD SET ASIDE VERDICT.

Beacon Hotel Man Sold Drink to Mrs. Heaton's Husband.

Upon the grounds that his client, William R. Talbott, a Beacon hotel man, had not been served with the proper papers in the action, Daniel Duggan, a Beacon attorney, is taking steps to have a verdict of $20,000 secured against him recently in the supreme court in New York city set aside.

The action against Talbott was brought by Mrs. Ida M. Heaton to recover $20,000 damages suffered through the loss of her home, her husband's grocery business and box factory through strong drink.

The action was brought under a provision of the state liquor law which prohibits any dealer from selling liquor to any person whose husband or wife has forbidden such sale.

Mrs. Heaton charged that she had warned Talbott not to sell drink to her husband, and that he had continued to do so. It was through this continued sale of drink that the home and business places were lost. Mrs. Heaton was awarded a full verdict of $20,000 by a jury in the supreme court in New York city recently.

Flatbush Play a Success.

A humorous play entitled "Scenes in a Railway Station," was rendered by the alphabetical division P—Z of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Reformed Church of Flatbush. The T. X. T. club house was filled to its utmost capacity and judging from the frequent applause the audience was well pleased with the entertainment. After the play all present were invited to join in singing "The Star Spangled Banner." The hearty response indicated their loyalty to our country's flag. Great credit is due Miss Olive Relyea for her untiring efforts to make the entertainment a success. The net proceeds amounted to $42.50.

TULIP BOOSTER BUSY.

Night Jailer Jocelyn Takes up Another Important Duty.

Spring is here. The tulip beds in front of the court house have become active and present the appearance of the waters around Great Britain, with the tiny green shoots representing the periscopes of the famous U-boats which are reported to infest the sea around England. A daily inspection of the tulip beds is made by Night Jailer Seth Jocelyn and any plant which seems feeble and needs assistance to push itself through the surface of the ground is carefully assisted by Jailer Jocelyn. Everyone around the court house takes especial interest in the front yard and especially the flower beds, which under the personal supervision of Mr. Jocelyn are planted annually and carefully screened from wandering chickens. Although Jailer Jocelyn has been unable to practice farming to any great extent since leaving the farm at Oliverea, he still keeps in practice by supervising the farming operations about the court house yard.

BULL INFLUENCE IN STOCK MARKET

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 16.—The changes effected in the administration of the Russian government were received with general satisfaction in financial circles today and were accepted as an influence on the bull side of the market. There were other factors also, which helped to induce buying in the early trading, and during the first fifteen minutes strength prevailed in nearly all the important issues. Steel Common reflected continued absorption, advancing ⅞ to 111⅜ and gains of a point or more were made in many of the leading copper shares. Marine Pfd. advanced one to 71⅛ and the common ½ to 27½. Bethlehem Steel B stock rose 1¾ to 117¾. Crucible Steel advanced ⅞ to 66¼, and Pittsburgh Coal ½ to 46½. Ohio Cities Gas rose 3¼ points to 114½. Reading opened off ⅞ at 93¼ and then rose to 94⅞.

CHARITY BALL ON APRIL 16

At a very important meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Benedictine Sanitarium, held this week, all arrangements as to the date and place of the annual Easter Charity Ball, for the benefit of the Charity Ward of the Benedictine Sanitarium, were completed. This ball, always so pleasantly anticipated from year to year, will be given on the evening of Monday, April 16th, at the armory. Lest there be confusion as to the use to which the fund for this ball will be put. The Freeman has been asked by the auxiliary to make the following explanation:

This fund, will as always in the past, go toward the yearly maintenance of the charity ward, where during the past year, considerably over one thousand days' care have been given. It is through the Charity Ball, alone, that this beneficent work of relieving suffering and bringing about restored health to many who otherwise could not have this care, is made possible. The recent money raising campaign had nothing whatever to do with this work. That was to raise money for the building fund for a needed addition to the hospital building.

NEW YORK CITY FACES FOOD FAMINE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 16—Food prices soared here today when a national railroad strike seemed almost a certainty. Dealers in the wholesale markets began laying in large stores of food commodities, which tended to boost prices. Announcement of embargoes upon perishable food by the railroad has caused a great demand for food and excited activity in the markets.

Eggs, butter and canned goods were the first to feel the pinch of the impending strike. Advances in the prices of these foods were rapid today. City officials declare New York can not hold out against famine for more than five days after food trains stop operatng. The railroad brotherhoods have offered a five days of grace for food trains running into New York, but city officials declare that five days after this period expires the city will be foodless. Storage warehouses here are almost empty, they claim.

Anniversary Mass.

An anniversary mass for the late Andrew Carpenter will be celebrated at St. Joseph's Church Saturday morning at 8 o'clock.

U. S. SYMPATHIES ALL WITH REBELS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 16.—The sympathies of the United States, which may be forced at any moment into war with Germany, are clearly with the Russian revolutionists. Out of the maze of reports coming from Petrograd state department officials interpret the troubled situation in Russia as the inevitable move towards Russian nationalism.

Any move towards nationalism is essentially anti-German. The revolution is regarded in official circles here as the culmination of a movement which has been intermittently on the surface ever since the outbreak of the great war in 1914. The opening of the hostilities found Russia thoroughly Germanized. German bureaucracy dominated both politics and industry in Russia.

Whole colonies of Germans in Russia had remained true to the German ideals so that the outbreak of the war found them more Prussian than the Kaiser himself. Then was uncovered the elaborate spy system which had been doing such effective work beneath the surface. It was this predominance of German influence that was responsible for the persistent reports that Russia would seek a separate peace, with all of the advantage to accrue from such a movement to the Germanic powers.

National Spirit Victorious.

But the nationalist spirit in Russia prevailed. Observers of international politics found it difficult in the early stages of the great war to reconcile the stand of Russia with the allies. Russian autocracy was a by word and it was thought the sympathies and aims of the Russians were clearly in line with the theories of German "kultur." But the difference was in leadership. In all Germany there could not be found a leader among the so-called intellectuals who is not heart and soul with the spirit of Prussianism. In Russia the intellectual leadership for more than a generation—or since the late Count Tolstoi was in middle life—has been in favor of nationalism and the rights of the people to devise the government under which they shall live.

Pro-Germans Set Back.

The revolution is therefore regarded here as the first fruit of the nationalist movement. Unless the Germans are able to take immediate advantage of the chaos into which Russia has been thrown, the revolution will react strongly against the German cause. A revolutionary triumph means the annihilation of German influence in Russian affairs and then a renewed war to crush Prussianism itself.

If the pro-Germans in Russia cannot cope with the revolution without delay, it means disaster to their cause in Russia as the Duma and the army are both of and for the people. The army all along has suffered from graft, intrigue and the failure of the Russian government to supply necessary rations. So antiquated are the means of transportation that whole armies and millions of the civil population have been starving because the almost inexhaustible food resources of the country were locked up.

Mrs. Grant Wins Prize.

The many Kingston friends of Mrs. Irving Grant of Schenectady will be glad to know she was awarded the prize at an oratorical contest held on Tuesday evening. Mrs. Grant was one of six speakers chosen to contest for a silver medal provided by the W. C. T. U. and chose as her essay, "Why Ned Said No." Mrs. Grant received many congratulations on winning the medal as the contestants were all splendid. Mrs. Grant is better known in Kingston as May Smith and was the popular cashier at Baker's store before her marriage. She has many friends in Kingston who will be pleased to know of her success.

Tearing a Town Apart?

Mayor Wilbur of Poughkeepsie was asked his opinion of the taxpayers' action in causing the arrest of members of his administration. "They are tearing the town apart," said the mayor "at a time when we ought to all be working together. Here the Chamber of Commemrce is starting a city-wide movement. The old board of directors is resigning to give way to a board that shall be elected by the most representative vote posible of the newly augmented membership after the campaign is over. There are big things ahead for Poughkeepsie and we ought to drop petty things and work together."

Methodist Spring Dinner.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Trinity M. E. Church have completed plans for the annual spring dinner and entertainment to be held in the church on Wednesday, March 21. A delicious and appetizing dinner will be served from 5 to 8 p. m., followed by an entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music. James Tinnie of Port Ewen will sing a number of Scotch songs, and a pleasant and social evening is assured all who attend.

Engineer Killed in New York.

Word was received in Poughkeepsie Thursday that William Mitteldorf of that city, a civil engineer employed by the New York Central railroad, had been killed in New York. He was 27 years of age and leaves a wife.

RUSSIA REJOICES AT RESULTS OF REVOLT

Grand Duke Michael Pledges Loyalty to New Government and Favors More Vigorous Prosecution of War—Starvation a Powerful Factor in Uprising.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Petrograd, March 16.—Great rejoicing was caused here today by the news that the Grand Duke Nicholas, most beloved of all Russian military commanders, has pledged his loyalty to the new government, and promised to conduct the campaign against the Germans with increased effort. The Grand Duke is the czar's uncle and ever since his clash with the czar more than a year ago, in which he was relieved of supreme command of the Russian armies, he has been out of sympathy with the government. The Grand Duke has always favored a more vigorous prosecution of the war, and he is expected to seize upon this opportunity to realize it.

It is reported that General Brusiloff, who was so successful against the Germans in Galicia, will be appointed as commander-in-chief. He, like the Grand Duke, favored a more vigorous prosecution of the war, and he has pledged his whole-hearted support to the new government.

Gen. Alexieff to Remain.

But one member of the old regime bids fair to remain in the new government, General Michael V. Alexieff, former chief of staff. It is reported that he will be appointed military dictator of the empire, always, though, to be under the will of the Duma.

Pledges of loyalty to the Duma government poured into Petrograd today in large numbers from commanders of troops in the various provinces and outlying districts.

The Duma head, M. Rodzianko, pointed out that there must of necessity be a brief period of confusion in the affairs of the nation while the new government is establishing itself. It would be an ideal moment, he pointed out, for an enemy to take advantage of this and strike hard while the attention of the troops was temporarily directed at the capital and not at the front. Every effort, he cautioned, must be made to prevent any untoward incidents during this period.

"The blood of Russian thousands shed during the past two years and a half pledges you to do this," said the instructions.

Arrests in Large Numbers.

Arrests of sympathizers with the old government continued in large numbers in Petrograd today. Prince Shakovsky, minister of commerce in the old cabinet, was included among them. As fast as they are arrested they are hurried to the old Tauris Palace and there confined. It is said that among the prisoners are ex-Premier Sturmer, one of the most rabid reactionaries in the old cabinet, and hated because of his pro-German tendencies, and ex-Premier Trepeff.

M. Goremykin, formerly one of the most powerful of the little group of men surrounding the czar, is also a prisoner. Former Home Minister Maklakoff is another.

Reports coming in from Moscow, Kharkov, Nijni Novgorod and the other cities today indicate that the work of reorganization is proceeding there apace with Petrograd.

Popular With Masses.

The elevation of Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, brother of the czar, to the regency, is hailed with much satisfaction by the masses, with whom he has long been popular.

The new regent is 38 years old, ten years younger than the czar. He has long been at outs with the government, and has had a stormy political career.

Seven years ago he was banished from Russia by Czar Nicholas for contracting a morganatic marriage with Mme. Mamontoff, daughter of a wealthy land-owner, who had been divorced from her husband.

The marriage incensed the czar. The grand duke was stripped of his titles and went to England. He returned to Russia at the start of the war and was given back his honors, although it is reported he has never been reconciled to his royal brother.

FLATBUSH.

The new government today is rapidly consolidating the various political factions which joined in the revolt. The new cabinet was formed with this in view. It is properly described as a "coalition" cabinet and contains members of every political faith. The Socialists, who as late as Tuesday threatened to oppose the formation of the new government, have come to terms.

The satisfaction at the course of Russian events was widespread throughout England today. For a long time it has been an open secret that the government has not been satisfied with Russia's course.

Officials are supremely confident that the new government will unite in pushing the war to a successful conclusion. A Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer, summed up the official attitude when, in communicating news of the revolt to the House of Commons, he said:

"There is comfort for us in the comparative tranquility with which this change was effected. There is also real comfort that all of our information shows that the movement was not, in any sense, directed toward an effort to secure peace for Russia.

"In fact, quite the contrary is true. The discontent was not against the government for carrying on the war, but for not carrying it on with the efficiency and energy which the people wanted and expected."

There is a general disposition in London to blame the empress and the reactionary ministers of the czar's cabinet rather than the monarch himself. The empress was markedly pro-German rather than the monarch himself. Before her marriage she was a German princess, Alix of Hesse-Darmstadt. She is believed to have exerted a tremendous influence over the czar's advisors.

M. Sturmer and M. Protopoff, two of the most powerful ministers in the old cabinet, who are reported to have been killed, were also accused of being pro-German and hated by the masses because of it.

Officials here privately express profound satisfaction at their being deposed.

Business and Religion.

Baragwanath, will ask and try to answer the very practical question: "Can a Kingston Business Man be a Christian?" The following Sunday night the question will be: "Can a Rich Man Enter the Kingdom?" There will be attractive music by the large chorus choir.

DROWNED LANDS CASE NEARS END

The Geiger-Divine case took up the entire session of supreme court on Thursday afternoon when the defense swore a number of witnesses. The case will probably be finished today and be sent to the jury. The witnesses sworn on Thursday, and in fact all during the trial, have been old residents of the town of Wawarsing in the neighborhood of the "drowned lands" and but few of them have not passed three score and ten. Men who had worked in the neighborhood years before the great Civil War and who could remember when the country was covered with timber lands were called. Many of them had worked at cutting down the timber and floating it down to tidewater.

The cases on the day calendar are No. 49, A. D. Hill against the Commercial Travelers Mutual Accident Association of America, an insurance action.

No. 56, Philip Schantz against John A. Lampman, a negligence action growing out of an automobile accident near Ulster Park.

No. 60, Max Cohen against Miller's National Insurance Company, to recover on a fire insurance policy.

No. 64, A. Ray Powley against A. R. Powley, action for services rendered.

No. 5, F. E. Carter, as admx., against the village of Rifton, a negligence action.

No. 24, Charles Buley against Robert J. Schaffer, personal injuries growing out of an automobile accident.

No. 28, Henry W. Osborne against Arthur Van Steenburgh, a negligence action growing out of an automobile accident.

No. 40, Jacob Weber against Jacob Raskin and another, an action on contract.

WOULD SET ASIDE VERDICT.

Beacon Hotel Man Sold Drink to Mrs. Heaton's Husband.

Upon the grounds that his client, William R. Talbott, a Beacon hotel man, had not been served with the proper papers in the action, Daniel Duggan, a Beacon attorney, is taking steps to have a verdict of $20,000 secured against him recently in the supreme court in New York city set aside.

The action against Talbott was brought by Mrs. Ida M. Heaton to recover $20,000 damages suffered through the loss of her home, her husband's grocery business and box factory through strong drink.

The action was brought under a provision of the state liquor law which prohibits any dealer from selling liquor to any person whose husband or wife has forbidden such sale.

Mrs. Heaton charged that she had warned Talbott not to sell drink to her husband, and that he had continued to do so. It was through this continued sale of drink that the home and business places were lost. Mrs. Heaton was awarded a full verdict of $20,000 by a jury in the supreme court in New York city recently.

After the play all present were invited to join in singing "The Star Spangled Banner." The hearty response indicated their loyalty to our country's flag. Great credit is due Miss Olive Relyea for her untiring efforts to make the entertainment a success. The net proceeds amounted to $42.50.

TULIP BOOSTER BUSY.

Night Jailer Jocelyn Takes up Another Important Duty.

Spring is here. The tulip beds in front of the court house have become active and present the appearance of the waters around Great Britain, with the tiny green shoots representing the periscopes of the famous U-boats which are reported to infest the sea around England. A daily inspection of the tulip beds is made by Night Jailer Seth Jocelyn and any plant which seems feeble and needs assistance to push itself through the surface of the ground is carefully assisted by Jailer Jocelyn. Everyone around the court house takes especial interest in the front yard, and especially the flower beds, which under the personal supervision of Mr. Jocelyn are planted annually and carefully screened from wandering chickens. Although Jailer Jocelyn has been unable to practice farming to any great extent since leaving the farm at Olivera, he still keeps in practice by supervising the farming operations about the court house yard.

BULL INFLUENCE IN STOCK MARKET

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 16.—The changes effected in the administration of the Russian government were received with general satisfaction in financial circles today and were accepted as an influence on the bull side of the market. There were other factors also, which helped to induce buying in the early trading, and during the first fifteen minutes strength prevailed in nearly all the important issues. Steel Common reflected continued absorption, advancing ⅞ to 111⅞ and gains of a point or more were made in many of the leading copper shares. Marine Pfd. advanced one to 71⅛ and the common ½ to 27½. Bethlehem Steel B stock rose 1¾ to 117¾. Crucible Steel advanced ⅞ to 66⅞, and Pittsburgh Coal ½ to 46½. Ohio Cities Gas rose 3¼ points to 114½. Reading opened off ⅞ at 93⅜ and then rose to 94⅞.

CHARITY BALL ON APRIL 16

At a very important meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Benedictine Sanitarium, held this week, all arrangements as to the date and place of the annual Easter Charity Ball, for the benefit of the Charity Ward of the Benedictine Sanitarium, were completed. This ball, always so pleasantly anticipated from year to year, will be given on the evening of Monday, April 16th, at the armory. Lest there be confusion as to the use to which the fund for this ball will be put, The Freeman has been asked by the auxiliary to make the following explanation:

This fund, will as always in the past, go toward the yearly maintenance of the charity ward, where during the past year, considerably over one thousand days' care have been given. It is through the Charity Ball, alone, that this beneficent work of relieving suffering and bringing about restored health to many who otherwise could not have this care, is made possible. The recent money raising campaign had nothing whatever to do with this work. That was to raise money for the building fund for a needed addition to the hospital building.

NEW YORK CITY FACES FOOD FAMINE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 16—Food prices soared here today when a national railroad strike seemed almost a certainty. Dealers in the wholesale markets began laying in large stores of food commodities, which tended to boost prices. Announcement of embargoes upon perishable food by the railroad has caused a great demand for food and excited activity in the markets.

Eggs, butter and canned goods were the first to feel the pinch of the impending strike. Advances in the prices of these foods were rapid today. City officials declare New York can not hold out against famine for more than five days after food trains stop operating. The railroad brotherhoods have offered a five days of grace for food trains running into New York, but city officials declare that five days after this period expires the city will be foodless. Storage warehouses here are almost empty, they claim.

Anniversary Mass.

An anniversary mass for the late Andrew Carpenter will be celebrated at St. Joseph's Church Saturday morning at 8 o'clock.

U. S. SYMPATHIES ALL WITH REBELS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 16.—The sympathies of the United States, which may be forced at any moment into war with Germany, are clearly with the Russian revolutionists. Out of the maze of reports coming from Petrograd state department officials interpret the troubled situation in Russia as the inevitable move towards Russian nationalism.

Any move towards nationalism is essentially anti-German. The revolution is regarded in official circles here as the culmination of a movement which has been intermittently on the surface ever since the outbreak of the great war in 1914. The opening of the hostilities found Russia thoroughly Germanized. German bureaucracy dominated both politics and industry in Russia.

Whole colonies of Germans in Russia had remained true to the German ideals so that the outbreak of the war found them more Prussian than the Kaiser himself. Then was uncovered the elaborate spy system which had been doing such effective work beneath the surface. It was this predominance of German influence that was responsible for the persistent reports that Russia would seek a separate peace, with all of the advantage to accrue from such a movement to the Germanic powers.

National Spirit Victorious.

But the nationalist spirit in Russia prevailed. Observers of international politics found it difficult in the early stages of the great war to reconcile the stand of Russia with the allies. Russian autocracy was a by word and it was thought the sympathies and aims of the Russians were clearly in line with the theories of German "kultur." But the difference was in leadership. In all Germany there could not be found a leader among the so-called intellectuals who is not heart and soul with the spirit of Prussianism. In Russia the intellectual leadership for more than a generation—or since the late Count Tolstoi was in middle life—has been in favor of nationalism and the rights of the people to devise the government under which they shall live.

Pro-Germans Set Back.

The revolution is therefore regarded here as the first fruit of the nationalist movement. Unless the Germans are able to take immediate advantage of the chaos into which Russia has been thrown, the revolution will react strongly against the German cause. A revolutionary triumph means the annihilation of German influence in Russian affairs and then a renewed war to crush Prussianism itself.

If the pro-Germans in Russia cannot cope with the revolution without delay, it means disaster to their cause in Russia as the Duma and the army are both of and for the people. The army all along has suffered from graft, intrigue and the failure of the Russian government to supply necessary rations. So antiquated are the means of transportation that whole armies and millions of the civil population have been starving because the almost inexhaustible food resources of the country were locked up.

Mrs. Grant is better known in Kingston as May Smith and was the popular cashier at Baker's store before her marriage. She has many friends in Kingston who will be pleased to know of her success.

Tearing a Town Apart?

Mayor Wilbur of Poughkeepsie was asked his opinion of the taxpayers' action in causing the arrest of members of his administration. "They are tearing the town apart," said the mayor "at a time when we ought to all be working together. Here the Chamber of Commerce is starting a city-wide movement. The old board of directors is resigning to give way to a board that shall be elected by the most representative vote posible of the newly augmented membership after the campaign is over. There are big things ahead for Poughkeepsie and we ought to drop petty things and work together."

RUSSIA REJOICES AT RESULTS OF REVOLT

Grand Duke Michael Pledges Loyalty to New Government and Favors More Vigorous Prosecution of War—Starvation a Powerful Factor in Uprising.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Petrograd, March 16.—Great rejoicing was caused here today by the news that the Grand Duke Nicholas, most beloved of all Russian military commanders, has pledged his loyalty to the new government, and promised to conduct the campaign against the Germans with increased effort. The Grand Duke is the czar's uncle and ever since his clash with the czar more than a year ago, in which he was relieved of supreme command of the Russian armies, he has been out of sympathy with the government. The Grand Duke has always favored a more vigorous prosecution of the war, and he is expected to seize upon this opportunity to realize it.

It is reported that General Brusiloff, who was so successful against the Germans in Galicia, will be appointed as commander-in-chief. He, like the Grand Duke, favored a more vigorous prosecution of the war, and he has pledged his whole-hearted support to the new government.

Gen. Alexieff to Remain.

But one member of the old regime bids fair to remain in the new government, General Michael V. Alexieff, former chief of staff. It is reported that he will be appointed military dictator of the empire, always, though, to be under the will of the Duma.

Pledges of loyalty to the Duma government poured into Petrograd today in large numbers from commanders of troops in the various provinces and outlying districts.

The Duma head, M. Rodzianko, pointed out that there must of necessity be a brief period of confusion in the affairs of the nation while the new government is establishing itself. It would be an ideal moment, he pointed out, for an enemy to take advantage of this and strike hard while the attention of the troops was temporarily directed at the capital and not at the front. Every effort, he cautioned, must be made to prevent any untoward incidents during this period.

"The blood of Russian thousands shed during the past two years and a half pledges you to do this," said the instructions.

Arrests in Large Numbers.

Arrests of sympathizers with the old government continued in large numbers in Petrograd today. Prince Shakovsky, minister of commerce in the old cabinet, was included among them. As fast as they are arrested they are hurried to the old Tauris Palace and there confined. It is said that among the prisoners are ex-Premier Sturmer, one of the most rabid reactionaries in the old cabinet, and hated because of his pro-German tendencies, and ex-Premier Trepoff.

M. Goremykin, formerly one of the most powerful of the little group of men surrounding the czar, is also a prisoner. Former Home Minister Maklakoff is another.

Reports coming in from Moscow, Kharkov, Nijni Novgorod and the other cities today indicate that the work of reorganization is proceeding there apace with Petrograd.

Popular With Masses.

The elevation of Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, brother of the czar, to the regency, is hailed with much satisfaction by the masses, with whom he has long been popular.

The new regent is 38 years old, ten years younger than the czar. He has long been at outs with the government, and has had a stormy political career.

Seven years ago he was banished from Russia by Czar Nicholas for contracting a morganatic marriage with Mme. Mamontoff, daughter of a wealthy land-owner, who had been divorced from her husband.

The marriage incensed the czar. The grand duke was stripped of his titles and went to England. He returned to Russia at the start of the war and was given back his honors, although it is reported he has never been reconciled to his royal brother.

POVERTY AND DRINK

TO what extent the present suffering among the poor is due to the use of liquor nobody knows. But there are hosts of hungry people whose sufferings are due to unjust economic conditions and not at all to drink, said a prominent clergyman in a recent newspaper article.

It has been clearly demonstrated that as working people improve their industrial conditions the tendency to use strong drink has decreased and light beer like our

has been substituted. In such instances greater industry and sobriety always follow.

Stand by workers when they battle against poverty! For while drink drives many a man to poverty, poverty also drives many a man to drink!

THE KITCHEN CABINET

The love of praise, howe'er concealed by art,
Reigns more or less and glows in every heart.
—Pope.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Apples in various ways make most wholesome dishes. Wash, core, cut in slices, without peeling and fry in a little hot salt pork fat, sprinkle with sugar, a little salt and brown on both sides. Arrange in overlapping slices around the pork roast or the platter of pork chops.

Fig Fritters.—Sift together three-fourths of a cupful of flour, a teaspoonful of baking powder, a third of a teaspoonful of salt, add the yolk of an egg, a teaspoonful of olive oil, a third of a cupful of milk; mix well and add six soaked figs, coarsely chopped and last of all fold in the beaten white of the egg. Drop by spoonfuls into smoking-hot fat and cook a golden brown. Serve with any hot fruit sauce.

Any juice left from canned fruit thickened with a tablespoonful of butter and flour cooked together, makes a delicious sauce for fritters or puddings.

Hot maple sirup is another sauce well liked.

Meat Balls With Horseradish Sauce.—Chop one pound of chuck steak and one onion together. Add one teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful of paprika, mix well and make into firm balls; sear in a well greased pan, turn until cooked to taste. For the sauce—take a half a cupful of horseradish, one-half cupful of cracker crumbs, one teaspoonful of salt, a dash or two of pepper, one-half cupful of cream, one teaspoonful of mustard, two teaspoonfuls of powdered sugar. Mix the dry ingredients and reduce the vinegar if the prepared horseradish is used; heat and serve hot with the meat balls.

Fried Biscuits.—Shape bread dough as for raised biscuit, then lightly drop into deep hot fat and cook until brown. Drain on brown paper.

Belmont Eggs.—Brown bread slightly in a hot oven, moisten with hot, salted water and butter. Cook eggs in hot water until the yolks are a delicate pink. Slip one on each slice of bread and surround with chopped, cold meat which has been warmed in butter.

C. OF C. BOOSTS CANAL TERMINALS

Kingston Has Good Start for State Improvement Through Gift of Site—Home Gardens and Annual Fair May be Part of Program of Work.

Directors of the Chamber of Commerce went on record unanimously at their meeting Thursday afternoon in favor of the barge canal terminal plans for Kingston and three other cities of the Hudson valley, approving the report submitted by Mayor Canfield in this connection. A number of representatives of the Chamber plan to attend the hearing on the terminal bill introduced by Senator Walton and now before the finance committee of the senate and the assembly ways and means committee.

Mayor Canfield's report reviewed the joint activities of the Chambers of the various cities affected and said that Kingston is in a most advantageous position because of the fact that the superintendent of public works and the state engineer had approved the local site.

Much routine business was disposed of by the directors, the program of work being deferred for a week's consideration of reports from various committees. The agricultural committee has outlined a most interesting program, including the holding of an annual exhibition of farm products in Kingston, co-operation with the farm bureau and encouragement of home gardens.

It was voted to have copies of the bylaws and a classified list of the membership printed.

Attention of the Chamber was called to the sheep demonstration train's visit to Kingston on March 29, and to urge co-operation in restoring the sheep-raising industry to this county.

Treasurer Herbert reported cash on hand as $2,515.34. Two new members were voted in: The Texas Company by Mark R. Lockwood, local manager; and the Nitro Powder Company, represented by Frank D. Patterson.

Captain Meagher expressed the thanks of Company M for magazines and reading matter supplied his command on duty at Ireland Corners.

ULSTER SUFFRAGE SCHOOL.

All Students Answer Present And Air Their Views on Vote.

That woman suffrage is merely a phase of the great awakening which is being felt in every sphere of life today was the theme that Mrs. John W. Searing developed in her three minute speech on "The Idealism of Suffrage," before the Kingston Suffrage School in the supervisors' room of the court house this afternoon. Short talks were also given by seven other pupils and Miss Elinor Byrns, conductor, then criticised each speech individually. A large number of women were present from out of town.

Mrs. M. J. Michael, chairman of the Kingston Suffrage Party, brought her large map showing the progress of woman suffrage to the school, and pointed out that four more states have been won for the cause since January. Mrs. Michael colors the suffrage states green instead of white as green is the color of growing things. Mrs. Joseph Freston of Milton, in her talk, "Why the Ballot Needs the Women," said "Women's votes are helpful, not because women are better than men but because they are different, and just because being women they often look at things from a different point of view. Votes for women means that women's opinions shall be counted." Mrs. Charles R. Taber of Milton concluded her address on "The Children of New York State," by saying, "As the intelligent, conscientious man of today knows that it is his duty as well as his privilege to vote, so the earnest thoughtful woman asks that she too may be given the vote so that she may have the power to help men in making the government what it ought to be for the boys and girls and little children of New York state." Mrs. H. B. Holman of Ellenville answered the questions "Why are women not satisfied? Why do they not enjoy what they have and rest content? Why do they bother about the vote?" by asserting that, first, "The large majority of women and children are still unprotected," and second, "So many of the questions affecting the welfare and happiness of women and children are under the control of city, state or federal government, and the men who run the affairs of government are elected by votes."

Mrs. S. B. Van Wagenen of Sleightsburgh, in her talk on "The Woman Worker," said, "Of the 3,291,714 women in New York state over 15 years of age, according to the census of 1910, only 1,793,558 were married and 1,498,156 were unmarried or widowed. A large part of these 1,498,156 have to work in order to live, and many of them have children, or fathers and mothers, or sisters and brothers to support. Women's wages depend to a large extent on votes as the experience of men ware-earners prove, and in fact where women vote equal pay for equal work is often the custom and has been obtained in several instances by state law." Mrs. William Simmons in beginning her account of the "Results of Woman Suffrage," said, "The result of woman suffrage is—more suffrage." "The State as a Mother," was Mrs. H. P. Van Wagenen's topic and she explained that government today is largely public housekeeping. Women are the housekeepers of the world. "A woman's first duty is to her own family, and by her vote she can improve conditions in her own home and for her own children. Her next duty is to her neighbors, her village and country, and by her vote she can make all homes better."

This evening at 8 o'clock the experiences of a woman watcher at the polls will be dramatized, and tomorrow afternoon Mrs. W. G. Mitchell of New York will speak on women's war service.

POVERTY AND DRINK

TO what extent the present suffering among the poor is due to the use of liquor nobody knows. But there are hosts of hungry people whose sufferings are due to unjust economic conditions and not at all to drink, said a prominent clergyman in a recent newspaper article.

It has been clearly demonstrated that as working people improve their industrial conditions the tendency to use strong drink has decreased and light beer like our

has been substituted. In such instances greater industry and sobriety always follow.

Stand by workers when they battle against poverty! For while drink drives many a man to poverty, poverty also drives many a man to drink!

PINE GROVE.

Pine Grove, March 15.—The stork visited Pine Grove last week and left a baby boy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Luhrs.

A party was given by Miss Mabel Myer at her home last Friday evening. Among those present were Mrs. Luhrs and daughters, Gussie and Bertha, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Bunton and children, LeRoy Mower, Harry and Roy Wolven, Addison Short, Charles Joy and George Keefe. Music was furnished for dancing by Edward Bishop. All present had a good time, as least we presume so by the hour some of them "hit the hay" the following morning.

The dance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Wolven on Saturday evening was attended by a crowd of over 40 guests. Frederick Pfisterer conveyed a straw load from this place and Daisy, white others came via autos and single rigs. Dancing was the order of the evening, and was indulged in until midnight, when refreshments of cake, sandwiches and coffee were served. All present had a delightful time. Music was furnished by Frederick Pfisterer and Norman Wolven's "rag time band." Among those present were: Mrs. Jane Alice Wolven, Norman Wolven, Mrs. Buckman, Harold Buckman, Mrs. Charles Van Steenberg, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Magee, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pfisterer and sons, Willie, Freddie and Alfred, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Snyder, Bernice Snyder, Orville Snyder, Herman Snyder Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bishop, Mabel Myer, Frances Myer, Marjorie Cousin, Mary Alice Bishop, Addison Short, Charles Joy, Mrs. Cowan, David Cowan, Mr. and Mrs. Roux and son, Paul, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Wolven and sons, Everett and John, Freddie Wales, Harold MacMullen and lady friend, Mr. Short and lady friend and Mr. Becker, Howard Wolven, Harry Wolven, Roy Wolven, George Keefe and LeRoy Mower.

Mrs. Springer is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Jane Cherirree.

John Wait and Patrick Sheedy, who have been boarding at Edward Bishop's, have returned to the city. "Paddy" was all smiles when he left the place as he thinks there's no place like good old New York.

Mrs. Jane Alice Wolven and Mrs. Charles Van Steenberg were visitors of Mrs. Edward Bishop on Monday afternoon.

Edward Bishoped has purchased a horse of John Wait.

Miss Bernice Snyder is working for Mrs. E. Cousin.

The school children have been selling "America First" buttons for the purpose of raising money for a new flag for the school room. We wish them success.

Miss Mabel Myer spent Monday and Tuesday at Saugerties.

OUR DAILY PATTERN.

1596.—A Simple, Practical Style—Ladies' House or Morning Dress.

In linen, khaki, gingham, seersucker or percale, this style will be most serviceable. It is made with overlapping fronts, and round neck outline, and has a four-gore skirt cut in comfortable fulness. The sleeve in wrist length is finished with a band cuff. In short length a neat turnback cuff forms a suitable trimming. The model could also be developed in serge, flannel or flannelette, and is nice, too, for lawn. The pattern is cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 6⅝ yards of 36 inch material for a 36 inch size. The skirt measures about 3 yards at the lower edge.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps by the Pattern Department, The Freeman, Rondout, N. Y. Be sure to state the size wanted.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

The love of praise, howe'er concealed by art,
Reigns more or less and glows in every heart.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Apples in various ways make most wholesome dishes. Wash, core, cut in slices, without peeling and fry in a little hot salt pork fat, sprinkle with sugar, a little salt and brown on both sides. Arrange in overlapping slices around the pork roast or the platter of pork chops.

Fig Fritters.—Sift together three-fourths of a cupful of flour, a teaspoonful of baking powder, a third of a teaspoonful of salt, add the yolk of an egg, a teaspoonful of olive oil, a third of a cupful of milk; mix well and add six soaked figs, coarsely chopped and last of all fold in the beaten white of the egg. Drop by spoonfuls into smoking-hot fat and cook a golden brown. Serve with any hot fruit sauce.

Any juice left from canned fruit thickened with a tablespoonful of butter and flour cooked together, makes a delicious sauce for fritters or puddings.

Hot maple sirup is another sauce well liked.

Meat Balls With Horseradish Sauce.—Chop one pound of chuck steak and one onion together. Add one teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful of paprika, mix well and make into [illegible] turn until cooked to taste. For the sauce—take a half a cupful of horseradish, one-half cupful of cracker crumbs, one teaspoonful of salt, a dash or two of pepper, one-half cupful of cream, one teaspoonful of mustard, two teaspoonfuls of powdered sugar. Mix the dry ingredients and reduce the vinegar if the prepared horseradish is used; heat and serve hot with the meat balls.

Fried Biscuits.—Shape bread dough as for raised biscuit, then lightly drop into deep hot fat and cook until brown. Drain on brown paper.

Belmont Eggs.—Brown bread slightly in a hot oven, moisten with hot, salted water and butter. Cook eggs in hot water until the yolks are a delicate pink. Slip one on each slice of bread and surround with chopped, cold meat which has been warmed in butter.

KINGSTON, N. Y., MAR. 16, 1917.

What a stirring drama it is that has been enacted these last few days behind the screen of the censorship in Petrograd! A revolution in which the army joined with the Duma and the people has been successful, Czar Nicholas has abdicated and a regency has been established which may or may not prove effective, all depending upon the development of this new movement, which may be compared to a slowly rolling snowball that is destined to become an avalanche, eventually wiping out all forms of monarchial government and leaving the way clear for a republic. Even with the lack of information at this stage, it is evident that the change has been most sweeping and is quite unlike anything of the kind in world history, not only in its minimum of blood-letting but in the singular unity disclosed among the jarring factions of Reds and Royalists in the Russian capital. Russia was ready for just this thing. The seed had been long sowed but the rottenness and wastefulness of bureaucrats proved the fertilizing influence that forced the harvest. The European giant is stirring and a despot has gravenly obeyed the first commands of its infant constitutional government just now breaking out of its swaddling clothes and endeavoring to struggle to his feet. It may be, too, that the superstitious Nicholas II was unable to bear up over the Ides of March with a general revolt against his ministers and their inefficient administration. Great tidings are these. If these be the fruits of the war in Europe, the divine right and the King business are well started on the toboggan. It is not beyond reasonable belief that the example of the Russians may yet be emulated by the people of a great empire to the Southwest of Petrograd. The Republic of Russia is no longer a dream of Tolstoy's followers and the Reds.

Ambassador Gerard's return should more than any other thing serve to separate the wheat from the chaff in the news dispatches which have been received, via London, as to the cavalier treatment meted out to our representative by high German officials in Berlin. At the time of Ambassador Bernstorff's departure, almost coincident with the American embassy folk leaving Germany, it was obvious that a local London color was being imparted to all dispatches passing through that city to Washington from Berlin and vice versa. Berlin was given a picture of Bernstorff a practical prisoner at President Wilson's order, while the flames of indignation were fanned on this side the Atlantic by the statements of indignities heaped upon Ambassador Gerard. The surprise of the latter at learning of the publication of these wild tales is sufficient proof of their truthlessness. The psychology of the British censorship is a weird thing, in itself an indication of that stupidity with which the mental processes of Englishmen used to be stigmatized by writers of funny paragraphs and stage comedians.

It has been proposed to call the new purchases from Denmark in the West Indies the Dewey Islands, but they have long been known to geographers and mariners as the Virgin Islands and their inhabitants want this name retained with "American" as a descriptive prefix. This seems a good suggestion, and certainly the wishes of the inhabitants ought to be considered. The act to provide a temporary government refers to them only as West Indian Islands purchased from Denmark. It means that existing laws are to remain in force, and that military, civil and judicial powers are to be vested in a governor and other appointees of the President, until Congress shall make further provision. The governor can be appointed only with the consent of the Senate, but during the temporary regime the President is to fix the compensation of all officers appointed. Let us hope that the residents of the "American Virgin" or "Dewey" Islands will never have just cause to complain of the great republic that has taken them under its wing.

Preparedness sentiment and the influence of cocktails in the making thereof was the subject of a most timely criticism by a Kingston military expert recently. His view of the present state of inefficiency of the regular army was borne out most conclusively this week when 300 police reserves of New York City were called out to protect Fort Hamilton and the army garrison there, the safety of the post being threatened by a force of German reservists, according to Dame Rumor. The alarm has since been run down to mere bar-room talk of what might happen. At any rate the spectacle of the police being called out to save our soldiers from annihilation is hardly a comforting one to all friends of effective National defense. We take no stock whatever in the idle talk now so general of proposed seizures of strategic points by emissaries of the Kaiser. We have too much faith in the good sense and loyalty of our citizens of German ancestry for that. These rumors serve one valuable purpose, however, in bringing home to people the plight of this country in the event of actual hostilities developing within the present year.

A story is told of a Frenchman who was very anxious to see an American business man at his home. The first morning when he called at the house the maid replied to his query: "The master is not down yet," meaning downstairs. The following morning he called again, and was met with: "The master is not risen from his bed. The Frenchman looked at her with a doubtful eye, paused for a few seconds, and said: Eet ees ver' deef-cult, but eef ze master will be neither up nor down, but in ze middle, zen I will call zat time.'—Philadelphia Star.

They Moved at Once.

A Rochester street car conductor recently succeeded in making a crowd congregated around the rear of his car move up forward, according to The Buffalo Commercial. Most of those on the back platform were women and they did not move when he suggested that there was "plenty of room in front." The clever young man then said: "Might as well move forward. Won't do you any good to stick around me. I'm married." The ladies moved.

Something to Eat.

The family was going on an outing in the woods, and mother was packing the lunch basket.

"Let me see," she murmured. "I've got lettuce sandwiches, olive sandwiches, peanut-butter sandwiches, macaroons, pickles, gingersnaps and chowchow. I wonder if I've forgotten anything."

"How about putting in something to eat?" said father sarcastically.—Chicago News.

He Knew the Game.

The manager, writing out the announcement of his show, ended with these words:

"The patronage of children under 18 is not encouraged."

"That," he remarked, shrewdly, "will appeal to the children over 18!"—New York Evening Post.

Standardized Lines

Less time consumed in the actual selling, means more time for personal contact with our friends.

Our shelves hold only standardized lines—products half sold by a name of merit gained by years of service. They cost more to us—in money—but they leave time for the often hurried motorist to request a fog-lifting explanation of that point. That's what we want. To illustrate, consider. CAN PRESIDENT AVERT A STRIKE?

In Quick Intervention by Wilson Lies the Only Hope of Preventing Brotherhood Strike Order From Being Enforced.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 16.—Only quick intervention by President Wilson can avert a nation-wide railroad strike. Both the brotherhoods and the railways look to Washington today for action.

Orders for a strike of freight train workers on eastern and southern railroads, to take effect at 6 o'clock tomorrow night have been given. On Monday the strike will spread to the middle west and will progress farther on Tuesday and Wednesday until it reaches its climax on Wednesday night when it will be in force on freight and passenger trains throughout the entire nation.

Railway managers are remaining in New York during the morning and if President Wilson has not acted by noon they will return to their homes and prepare for the strike. The brotherhood chiefs will leave when the railway managers leave. Both sides are shifting the blame and responsibility. The railway executives state they agreed to put the interpretation of the Adamson Law up to the Goethals Commission, recently appointed by President Wilson. The brotherhoods charge the executives with an attempt to force further arbitration until a national crisis would make a strike impossible. Both sides have been asked to continue transportation of food and fuel. The brotherhoods have notified Joseph W. Hartigan, commissioner of weights and measures, they will give New York city five days of grace in which to store up foods before transportation of food commodities is stopped. The railways have promised to do all in their power to continue the operation of food trains with "the operatives available."

Railroads today are acting by placing of embargoes and issuance of appeals for loyalty to their employes. The New York Central was the first big system to issue a call to its employes for loyalty during the crisis and other roads are today appealing to their men to stand by them.

The railroad strike, if it goes into effect, will have the full moral support of the American Federation of Labor, although the railroad brotherhoods are not directly affiliated with that organization.

Samuel Gompers member of the council of national defense and president of the labor federation, made it clear today that the brotherhoods would be supported to the limit of the Federation's resources. No strike of other union workers in sympathy with railroad men is contemplated, however, President Gompers said.

Brotherhood chiefs are not expecting a call for further conferences from the railway executives, W. G. Lee of the traimen, said today, but they will hold themselves in readiness for conferences until the executives dissolve.

Lee hinted that the brotherhoods do not expect the strike to last more than five days. At the end of that time they feel certain the government will have taken over the roads and will be operatin- them.

Timely Food Sale at

Planthaber's Saturday

"Patronize home industries" is a slogan that has lost importance in Kingston. Hundreds of home-keepers who are loudest in their denunciation of this city's Chamber of Commerce because factories do not spring up like mushrooms overnight, divert their trade to outside trust channels because they can occasionally save a penny or two an article of food. Infested as the city is with trust stores which are a menace to local dealers and which carry their earnings out of Kingston into the trust treasuries, Kingstonians persist in patronizing them in preference to home dealers who in hundreds of instances have helped customers bridge many a "hard-times channel." We do not permit the newcomers to interfere with us. We proceed on the assumption that honest merchandise, right weight and lowest-in-the-city prices will win out in the end.

C. OF C. BOOSTS CANAL TERMINALS

Kingston Has Good Start for State Improvement Through Gift of Site—Home Gardens and Annual Fair May be Part of Program of Work.

Directors of the Chamber of Commerce went on record unanimously at their meeting Thursday afternoon in favor of the barge canal terminal plans for Kingston and three other cities of the Hudson valley, approving the report submitted by Mayor Canfield in this connection. A number of representatives of the Chamber plan to attend the hearing on the terminal bill introduced by Senator Walton and now before the finance committee of the senate and the assembly ways and means committee.

Mayor Canfield's report reviewed the joint activities of the Chambers of the various cities affected and said that Kingston is in a most advantageous position because of the fact that the superintendent of public works and the state engineer had approved the local site.

Much routine business was disposed of by the directors, the program of work being deferred for a week's consideration of reports from various committees. The agricultural committee has outlined a most interesting program, including the holding of an annual exhibition of farm products in Kingston, co-operation with the farm bureau and encouragement of home gardens.

It was voted to have copies of the bylaws and a classified list of the membership printed.

Attention of the Chamber was called to the sheep demonstration train's visit to Kingston on March 29, and to urge co-operation in restoring the sheep-raising industry to this county.

Treasurer Herbert reported cash on hand as $2,515.31. Two new members were voted in: The Texas Company by Mark R. Lockwood, local manager; and the Nitro Powder Company, represented by Frank D. Patterson.

Captain Meagher expressed the thanks of Company M for magazines and reading matter supplied his command on duty at Ireland Corners.

ULSTER SUFFRAGE SCHOOL.

All Students Answer Present And Air Their Views on Vote.

That woman suffrage is merely a phase of the great awakening which is being felt in every sphere of life today was the theme that Mrs John W Searing developed in her three minute speech on "The Idealism of Suffrage," before the Kingston Suffrage School in the supervisors' room of the court house this afternoon. Short talks were also given by seven other pupils and Miss Elinor Byrns, conductor, then criticised each speech individually. A large number of women were present from out of town.

Mrs M J. Michael, chairman of the Kingston Suffrage Party, brought her large map showing the progress of woman suffrage to the school, and pointed out that four more states have been won for the cause since January. Mrs Michael colors the suffrage states green instead of white as green is the color of growing things. Mrs. Joseph Preston of Milton, in her talk, "Why the Ballot Needs the Women," said "Women's votes are helpful, not because women are better than men but because they are different, and just because being women they often look at things from a different point of view Votes for women means that women's opinions shall be counted." Mrs. Charles R. Taber of Milton concluded her address on "The Children of New York State," by saying, "As the intelligent, conscientious man of today knows that it is his duty as well as his privilege to vote, so the earnest thoughtful woman asks that she too may be given the vote so that she may have the power to help men in making the government what it ought to be for the boys and girls and little children of New York state." Mrs H. B. Holman of Ellenville answered the questions "Why are women not satisfied?" Why do they not enjoy what they have and rest content?" Why do they bother about the vote?" by asserting that, first, "The large majority of women and children are still unprotected," and second, "So many of the questions affecting the welfare and happiness of women and children are under the control of city, state or federal government, and the men who run the affairs of government are elected by votes."

Mrs. S B Van Wagenen of Poughkeepsie, in her talk on "The Woman Worker," said, "Of the 3,221,714 women in New York state over 16 years of age, according to the census of 1910, only 1,723,558 were married and 1,498,156 were unmarried or widowed. A large part of these 1,498,156 have to work in order to live, and many of them have children or fathers and mothers, or sisters and brothers to support. Women's wages depend to a large extent on votes as the experience of men wage-earners prove, and in fact where women vote equal pay for equal work is often the custom and has been obtained in several instances by state law." Mrs. William Simmons in beginning her account of the "Results of Woman Suffrage," said, "The result of woman suffrage is—more suffrage." "The State as a Mother," was Mrs. H. P. Van Wagenen's topic and she explained that government today is largely public housekeeping. Women are the housekeepers of the world. "A woman's first duty is to her own family, and by her vote she can improve conditions in her own home and for her own children. Her next duty is to her neighbors, her village and country and by her vote she can make all three better."

This evening at 8 o'clock the experiences of a woman watcher at the polls will be dramatized, and tomorrow afternoon Mrs. W. G. Mitchell of New York will speak on women's ar-

NARROW ESCAPE ON R. R. CROSSING

Barney Blakslee and Charles DeGraff Nearly Killed on Flatbush Crossing When Gates Were Dropped.

Barney Blakslee and Charles DeGraff, employed by Casper Bailey, the Broadway grocer, had a narrow escape from death or serious injury Thursday afternoon about 5 o'clock on the Flatbush avenue railroad crossing. They had been to Flatbush in the automobile delivery with groceries and were returning to Kingston. The crossing gates were up and they started the machine across the tracks. They had gotten but partly across when the gates were dropped. So close was the machine to the gates at the time that one of the gates struck the radiator of the machine.

A south bound train was approaching at full speed at the time and men along the track seeing the machine caught between the gates hastened up the track, signaling to the train to stop. In making an effort to get off the crossing one of the gates was smashed by the machine and it rolled off to safety just as the train shot by, the wind of it rustling in the ears of the men. The train had slowed down when it was signaled but owing to the speed it was being driven the engineer was unable to bring the train to a stop until it had ran some distance beyond the crossing.

GENERAL SARRAIL

ALLIED COMMANDER IN BALKANS TO WED FRENCH ARMY NURSE.

There have been many "war romances" since the beginning of the European conflagration, but the announcement of the engagement of General Maurice Sarrail, commander-in-chief of the Allied armies at Saloniki and in Macedonia, has brought to light a real one. General Sarrail is to wed Mlle. de Joannis, a member of the French nursing staff with General Sarrail's armies.

General Sarrail's command is one of the most picturesque in the history of the world, inasmuch as in it is represented almost every race which is fighting under the flags of the Allies. A prominent German general was credited with referring to it as an "army of hoodlums gathered from the ends of the earth."

American Mineral Oil

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Use of Mineral Oil.

Dr. Le Tanneur contributes to the Paris Medical some practical points in the use of mineral oil in constipation. The oil, he says, is in no way digested or even modified by the juices of the stomach and intestines. It acts as a lubricant and nothing else, though it tends to heal abrasions of the intestinal wall caused by rough particles of food.

The New York Medical Journal says mineral oil should be taken either before breakfast or after dinner, two tablespoonfuls being a dose. Its use should be continued every day for at least a fortnight, when the bowels will continue to work naturally without it, for the mineral oil is in no sense a cathartic, but it will cure constipation.—Kingston Daily Freeman, February 17, 1917.

KINGSTON, N. Y., MAR. 16, 1917.

What a stirring drama it is that has been enacted these last few days behind the screen of the censorship in Petrograd! A revolution in which the army joined with the Duma and the people has been successful, Czar Nicholas has abdicated and a regency has been established which may or may not prove effective, all depending upon the development of this new movement, which may be compared to a slowly rolling snowball that is destined to become an avalanche, eventually wiping out all forms of monarchial government and leaving the way clear for a republic. Even with the lack of information at this stage, it is evident that the change has been most sweeping and is quite unlike anything of the kind in world history, not only in its minimum of blood-letting but in the singular unity disclosed among the jarring factions of Reds and Royalists in the Russian capital. Russia was ready for just this thing. The seed had been long sowed but the rottenness and wastefulness of bureaucrats proved the fertilizing influence that forced the harvest. The European giant is stirring and a despot has cravenly obeyed the first commands of its infant constitutional government just now breaking out of its swaddling clothes and endeavoring to struggle to his feet. It may be, too, that the superstitious Nicholas II was unable to bear up over the Ides of March with a general revolt against his ministers and their inefficient administration. Great tidings are these. If these be the fruits of the war in Europe, the divine right and the King business are well started on the toboggan. It is not beyond reasonable belief that the example of the Russians may yet be emulated by the people of a great empire to the Southwest of Petrograd. The Republic of Russia is no longer a dream of Tolstoy's followers and the Reds.

Ambassador Gerard's return should [illegible] separate the wheat from the chaff in the news dispatches which have been received, via London, as to the cavalier treatment meted out to our representative by high German officials in Berlin. At the time of Ambassador Bernstorff's departure, almost coincident with the American embassy folk leaving Germany, it was obvious that a local London color was being imparted to all dispatches passing through that city to Washington from Berlin and vice versa. Berlin was given a picture of Bernstorff a practical prisoner at President Wilson's order, while the flames of indignation were fanned on this side the Atlantic by the statements of indignities heaped upon Ambassador Gerard. The surprise of the latter at learning of the publication of these wild tales is sufficient proof of their truthlessness. The psychology of the British censorship is a weird thing, in itself an indication of that stupidity with which the mental processes of Englishmen used to be stigmatized by writers of funny paragraphs and stage comedians.

It has been proposed to call the new purchases from Denmark in the West Indies the Dewey Islands, but they have long been known to geographers and mariners as the Virgin Islands and their inhabitants want this name retained with "American" as a descriptive prefix. This seems a good suggestion, and certainly the wishes of the inhabitants ought to be considered. The act to provide a temporary government refers to them only as West Indian Islands purchased from Denmark. It means that existing laws are to remain in force, and that military, civil and judicial powers are to be vested in a governor and other appointees of the President, until Congress shall make further provision. The governor can be appointed only with the consent of the Senate, but during the temporary regime the President is to fix the compensation of all officers appointed. Let us hope that the resident of the "American Virgin" or "Dewey" Islands will never have just cause to complain of the great republic that has taken them under its wing.

Preparedness sentiment and the influence of cocktails in the making thereof was the subject of a most timely criticism by a Kingston military expert recently. His view of the present state of inefficiency of the regular army was borne out most conclusively this week when 300 police reserves of New York City were called out to protect Fort Hamilton and the army garrison there, the safety of the post being threatened by a force of German reservists, according to Dame Rumor. The alarm has since been run down to mere bar-room talk of what might happen. At any rate the spectacle of the police being called out to save our soldiers from annihilation is hardly a comforting one to all friends of effective National defense. We take no stock whatever in the idle talk now in general of proposed seizures of strategic points by emissaries of the Kaiser. We have too much faith in the good sense and loyalty of our citizens of German ancestry for that. These rumors serve one valuable purpose, however, in bringing home to people the plight of this country in the event of actual hostilities developing within the present year.

A story is told of a Frenchman who was very anxious to see an American business man at his home. The first morning when he called at the house the maid replied to his query: "The master is not down yet," meaning downstairs. The following morning he called again, and was met with: "The master is not risen from his bed. The Frenchman looked at her with a doubtful eye, paused for a few seconds, and said: Bet ees, ver' deef-cult, but eef ze master will be neither up nor down, but in ze middle, zen I will call zat time."—Philadelphia Star.

They Moved at Once.

A Rochester street car conductor recently succeeded in making a crowd congregated around the rear of his car move up forward, according to The Buffalo Commercial. Most of those on the back platform were women and they did not move when he suggested that there was "plenty of room in front." The clever young man then said: "Might as well move forward. Won't do you any good to stick around me. I'm married." The ladies moved.

Something to Eat.

The family was going on an outing in the woods, and mother was packing the lunch basket.

"Let me see," she murmured. "I've got lettuce sandwiches, olive sandwiches, peanut-butter sandwiches, mayonnaise, pickles, gingersnaps and chowchow. I wonder if I've forgotten anything."

"How about putting in something to eat?" said father sarcastically.—Chicago News.

The manager, writing out the announcement of his show, ended with these words:

"The patronage of children under 13 is earnestly encouraged."

"That," he remarked, shrewdly, "will appeal to the children over 13!"—New York Evening Post.

Bockwurst at Lay's

No matter the weather, the early or tardy arrival of Spring, Bockwurst makes its appearance with unfailing regularity at this period every year, and although the delicious tidbits are made for only a brief period, the demand for them grows greater each succeeding Spring. Bockwursts produce energy and nerve-power, possessing nutritive properties which build vitality and force. They furnish enjoyment and satisfaction. It is called Bockwurst because it is a rare, seasonable treat, like Bock beer, and has absolutely no connection with the goat. Lean veal, pork, strictly fresh eggs, crackers, olives, etc., are its chief ingredients, judiciously proportioned to produce an always-to-be-remembered delicious flavor. Order Bockwurst Saturday.

Martin O'Connor, Amanuensis

Why He Loved St. Patrick's Day.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Patrick O'Connor came to America when he was a mere lad and by dint of hard work and perseverance made a fortune. He left a sister in Ireland who married Daniel O'Malley, and she was separated from her brother for many years. He was used to sending her money occasionally, and after awhile, when she had grown older, she would sometimes depute her adopted daughter, Aileen, who was coming to womanhood, to thank her brother for his benefactions. The truth is that the woman had not been very well educated, and Aileen, having more advantages, was better fitted for these replies. As the years rolled by and O'Connor became more and more prosperous it seemed to his sister that his letters showed a better education than at first. The fact is that he turned over a part of his correspondence to his son, Martin, and it occasionally became Martin's part to write these check bearing letters to his aunt, but he wrote them in his father's name.

One day Martin opened the mail in his father's absence and read a letter of thanks for a remittance. It was written in Mrs. O'Malley's name, but Martin saw plainly that it had not been written by her. It bore the impress of a young girl, and a very intelligent girl at that. There was real gratitude in it, and it was overflowing with kindliness as well. It seemed to Martin that an emanation from a lovely girl had been wafted across the ocean and entered his heart.

The next time Mr. O'Connor gave his son a check to send to Mrs. O'Malley Martin wrote a letter which was meant for a reply to the one last received. One not knowing the relationship between the two correspondents would have supposed that it had been written to a girl instead of his aunt. Mrs. O'Malley concluded that her brother was becoming very affectionate in his old age. It was couched in such kindly terms that she commissioned Aileen to express for her her appreciation of her brother's interest in her and assure him that his sister had not lost any of her affection for him during their long separation.

Aileen, feeling that she was writing from a sister to a brother, did not scruple to express all the affection her mother desired she should express for Mr. O'Connor. When the recipient read it he wondered at this unusual demonstration of affection, but set it down to the fact that his sister was growing old and as persons age their affection for those of their own blood ripens. Being a man of business and undemonstrative, he handed the letter to his son and told him to reply in kind.

In this way a correspondence grew up between Martin O'Connor and Aileen, the one writing supposedly to her uncle, the other presumably to his aunt, which grew warmer and warmer till the letters between the brother and sister became almost lover-like.

Whether Martin was really falling in love with his aunt or whether he suspected the old lady had employed an amanuensis doesn't appear, but one thing is certain—the letters he received became in time so affectionate that whenever he saw one delivered by the postman written in the well known hand he appropriated it to himself, and his father never saw it. It is quite likely that Aileen did the same with those letters that came from America.

When love's quicksilver had attained a considerable height Martin began to think that he would like to investigate this aunt of his to whom he was making a semi-brotherly love and see if her earthly part was as beautiful as her soul. He began to express to his father a desire for a trip abroad and especially to visit the green isle where his ancestors had lived and died. He became very pathetic over a plot of ground his father had often described to him where the O'Connors were moldering. An O'Connor had been a bishop, and Martin expressed himself as desirous of visiting the grave of this eminent son of the church.

Mr. O'Connor, much pleased that his son should take this interest in his ancestors, who, by the bye, had from time immemorial been stalwart churchgoers, consented that Martin should go abroad in the early spring, and Martin suggested that it would be well for him to time his visit for St. Patrick's day.

"The very thing," said Mr. O'Connor. "You may attend services on that anniversary in the very church where Bishop O'Connor preached."

Martin sailed early in March, arranging to be with his aunt on the 17th, which every one with Irish blood in his veins knows is St. Patrick's day. Before saying goodby to him his father whispered in his ear:

"Be sure to make it plain to your aunt that I'm very fond of her, and all that. You know how to say such things better than I do, and I rely on you to express my feelings."

"Trust me for that, father," said Martin. "I'll do it warmly."

A letter came from the young man postmarked London stating that he was about to leave for the home of the O'Connors the next day. Later a long letter was received describing his meeting with his aunt and how he spent St. Patrick's day. "In company," it said, "with that beloved woman who has written her brother such beautiful letters I attended services, sitting directly under the pulpit where our great Bishop O'Connor preached those soul stirring sermons. Later we visited the plot where the O'Connors are buried, and I sat beside my aunt on a stone beneath which Fergus O'Connor, my great-grandfather, rests. It seemed to me that the family affection for which our ancestors were marked was rising, a sort of ethereal aroma. Something struck a responsive chord in my heart and set it vibrating. So affected was I that I drew my aunt to me, kissed her and whispered in her ear, 'Dear heart, I bear you all the love of the O'Connors from the day when the first O'Connor spoke of love to our first maternal ancestor.'"

This part of the letter met with an enthusiastic response from Patrick O'Connor and all his family. The good man rejoiced that in his son he had one to make up for his own undemonstrative nature. "I wonder," he said, "that the boy could have felt so much affection for an old woman even though she be his father's sister."

"You forget," said Mrs. O'Connor, "that Martin was expressing your feelings for his aunt."

"You're right," was the reply. "I didn't think of it in that light. Martin is a very good boy and loves me as a son should love a father."

Martin's letters after that all smacked of that St. Patrick's day he had spent with his beloved aunt. Everything that happened seemed to turn upon that eventful anniversary. A package of books came across the ocean from Martin, and every book was on the subject of St. Patrick.

"The boy shows great enthusiasm for his church," said his mother. "Please God he may be a priest."

If the cathedrals Martin visited in company with his aunt was any criterion he bade fair to be an archbishop. He seemed to be forever dawdling about the grounds in which these holy edifices stood, and the depth of his feelings seemed to come through his aunt, who was always exciting in him some pure emotion.

Martin's time abroad was limited. His father, who was getting old, relied much upon him in the conduct of his affairs and wrote him not on any account to overstay his leave. On receipt of this letter Martin wrote that he had grown so fond of his aunt that it had become impossible to tear himself away from her. He would not overstay his leave, but this was because she had consented to go to America with him to visit her dear brother.

Patrick O'Connor was appalled at this. So long as she was absent from him he could satisfy his demonstrative nature through his son, but if she were with him this would devolve upon himself. As to embracing his sister, sitting beside her holding her hand or with his arm around her waist, he could not do so even with his wife. However, he could think of no way to head off his sister's visit and prepared to show as much affection as possible.

It was the month of June when Martin sailed from Ireland. St. Patrick's day had gone by three months before, but Martin still harped upon it in his letters, and even the month of roses, though it seemed to appeal very strongly to the young man, was no more dear to him than the month of winds and dust. Still, he had written that he could not possibly return till June, and there appeared to be some especial reason for the delay.

There were a good many things about the return of Martin O'Connor that his parents could not understand. In the first place he announced that he had decided since he had been away from home to live thereafter under his own roof tree and to go there as soon as he had reached home. He would take his aunt with him for a housekeeper. The only comfort to be derived by his parents from this was by his father, who was relieved to know that he would not have to sit holding his sister's hand, with an occasional kiss. Martin was the apple of his eye, and, although he was loath to lose the boy from his home, he fitted up a house for him that it might be ready against his return.

Martin arrived in the evening and drove to his bachelor quarters, where the O'Connor family were waiting for him and his aunt. When the front door was opened and Patrick O'Connor saw his sister he exclaimed:

"Upon my word, Nora, you're not a bit older than you were thirty years ago."

"I'm not Nora," she said on throwing her arms about Mr. O'Connor; "I'm Aileen O'Connor, your sister's adopted daughter."

A bewildered look came over the man's face; then an idea seemed to be boring its way into his brain. Turning to his son, he said:

"Mart."

"Well, dad, what is it?"

"What made you suddenly so fond of St. Patrick's day?"

"Well, to tell the truth, dad, in the morning Aileen and I went to mass in the church where Bishop O'Connor once preached, and in the evening we sat on his tomb, I telling her that I loved her and must take her back to America with me as my wife."

"And what's all this about your aunt?"

"You remember that you asked me to answer my aunt's letters to you. Well, Aunt Nora deputed Aileen to reply to the replies. The result was that I fell in love with my aunt and Aileen fell in love with her uncle. And there you are!"

St. Patrick's day is the principal anniversary celebrated in Martin O'Connor's family.

SIGNIFICANCE OF MAINTENANCE

Greatest Part of Highway Expense Is For Construction.

BUSINESS METHODS NEEDED

There Should Be a Proper System of Road Maintenance, With Its Auxiliary System of Road Accounts and Financial Control—This Would Place Expenditures on a Sound Basis.

The greatest part of the large annual expenditure for roads is for construction, writes E. W. James, chief of maintenance, United States office of public roads, in the New York Evening Post. Another large part is spent in repairing worn out roads. Very little is spent systematically for maintaining in good condition roads already built. The fact that it is usually impossible to separate expenditures for construction, repair and maintenance indicates the indifferent attitude of local officials toward maintenance. What such indifference means should be thoroughly understood.

The idea of building roads with bond money is a good one. The arrangement can often be made to good business advantage, and is a good device for making posterity share in the payment of a certain advantage that we bequeath to it. But as usually practiced the arrangement of issuing bonds serves actually to shift all payment to posterity and to exhaust the proceeds of the sale in our own generation. We are heavily discounting the future in road building, and unless some change is brought about, financial difficulties are sure to come that can be met only by heavy direct taxes that will have to be expended without any direct benefits.

The first step toward remedying this condition is really a very simple one. Every mile of improved road built by a county from any funds whatever should create a determinable annual liability against the annual road revenues of the county. This liability is determined by a competent engineer as the probable annual cost of maintenance of that particular mile of improved road.

Let us assume the case of a county having $10,000 annual road revenue under the maximum levy. The county already has 300 miles of common dirt roads and is unable to keep them in good condition for $33 per mile, because of the heavy traffic near the market towns. So it plans to issue bonds and to construct gravel roads near the principal market towns or railroad points or centers of population. The question is, How many miles of gravel road should the county build? The engineer advising the county studies the materials available and estimates that roads built with the best local gravel will cost $125 per mile annually to maintain. To maintain the dirt roads at least $30 per mile should be allowed on 100 miles. By a simple computation we find that fifty-six miles of gravel road at $125 is $7,000, and 100 miles of dirt road is $3,000, and our $10,000 revenue is exhausted. This is, then, the limit of such road that the county should construct.

Our county governments are not so efficient as our city governments. However honest county officials may be, however seriously they take their duties, they labor under a heavy burden of habit and custom that practically makes impossible any thorough, effective work by present methods.

In 1914 the United States expended in all $249,055,067 for road work; a quarter of a billion dollars; more than one-third of the value of the 1915 cotton crop at 10 cents per pound. If we would conserve this tremendous annual investment of public wealth in public works so that it may be cumulative in effect and not a dead annual charge for transportation, we must revise our methods of conducting road affairs, introduce proper supervision, proper business methods, and once and for all take roads out of local politics.

The instrumentality for accomplishing these ends is a proper system of road maintenance, with its auxiliary system of road accounts and financial control. Such system will save the community from assuming an undue burden of fixed charges, will provide for the permanent and effective upkeep of the public property represented by the road system, will distribute the annual revenues where traffic and investment values demand, and not as sought by local politicians, and will place the largest single item of public expenditure, that for public roads, on a business basis. The result will be that the huge investment of annual public revenues will have a cumulative value and the public property represented by that investment will be permanently conserved.

We have no right to say that any good work is too hard for us to do.

CAN PRESIDENT AVERT A STRIKE?

In Quick Intervention by Wilson Lies the Only Hope of Preventing Brotherhood Strike Order From Being Enforced.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 16.—Only quick intervention by President Wilson can avert a nation-wide railroad strike. Both the brotherhoods and the railways look to Washington today for action.

Orders for a strike of freight train workers on eastern and southern railroads, to take effect at 6 o'clock tomorrow night have been given. On Monday the strike will spread to the middle west and will progress farther on Tuesday and Wednesday until it reaches its climax on Wednesday night when it will be in force as freight and passenger trains throughout the entire nation.

Railway managers are remaining in New York during the morning and if President Wilson has not acted by noon they will return to their homes and prepare for the strike. The brotherhood chiefs will leave when the railway managers leave. Both sides are shifting the blame and responsibility. The railway executives state they agreed to put the interpretation of the Adamson Law up to the Goethals Commission, recently appointed by President Wilson. The brotherhoods charge the executives with an attempt to force further arbitration until a national crisis would make a strike impossible. Both sides have been asked to continue transportation of food and fuel. The brotherhoods have notified Joseph W. Hartigan, commissioner of weights and measures, they will give New York city five days of grace in which to store up foods before transportation of food commodities is stopped. The railways have promised to do all in their power to continue the operation of food trains with "the operatives available."

Railroads today are acting by placing of embargoes and issuance of appeals for loyalty to their employes. The New York Central was the first big system to issue a call to its employes for loyalty during the crisis and other roads are today appealing to their men to stand by them.

The railroad strike, if it goes into effect, will have the full moral support of the American Federation of Labor, although the railroad brotherhoods are not directly affiliated with that organization.

Samuel Gompers member of the council of national defense and president of the labor federation, made it clear today that the brotherhoods would be supported to the limit of the Federation's resources. No strike of other union workers in sympathy with railroad men is contemplated, however, President Gompers said.

Brotherhood chiefs are not expecting a call for further conferences from the railway executives, W. G. Lee of the trainmen, said today, but they will hold themselves in readiness for conferences until the executives dissolve.

Lee hinted that the brotherhoods do not expect the strike to last more than five days. At the end of that time they feel certain the government will have taken over the roads and will be operating them.

"Patronize home industries" is a slogan that has lost importance in Kingston. Hundreds of home-keepers who are loudest in their denunciation of this city's Chamber of Commerce because factories do not spring up like mushrooms overnight, direct their trade to outside trust channels because they can occasionally save a penny or two an article of food. Infested as the city is with trust stores which are a menace to local dealers and which carry their earnings out of Kingston into the trust treasuries, Kingstonians persist in patronizing them in preference to home dealers who in hundreds of instances have helped customers bridge many a "hard-times channel." We do not permit the newcomers to interfere with us. We proceed on the assumption that honest merchandise, right weight and lowest-in-the-city prices will win out in the end.

A Willful Woman

By OSCAR COX

It was in the reign of King Edward of England, the fourth of that name, that John Ochiltree, a young farmer living in the county of Kent, met a lass called Mary Griggs at a Maying and conceived a strong love for her. He danced with her around the Maypole and looked at her languishingly, but his modesty and the strength of his love tied his tongue so that he could say nothing to her.

And so he danced and ogled and ogled and danced, but never a word could he say to the girl.

Mary had been keeping company with Richard Doyle, a maker of armor, but the moment he laid eyes on John Ochiltree Doyle saw that she was lost to him in favor of his rival. He drew away sulky, thus leaving the field to the man who had supplanted him.

The day after the Maying John waited for Mary to come out of her father's thatched cottage and joined her. He managed to wish her "good morning" and said that the crops promised to be good and that one of his cows had calved, but besides this he said nothing. Mary was a girl of spirit and would not help him out. She said to herself that he should talk to her like any other man or she would have none of him. He continued to show her by his expression that he was enamored of her, and when he looked at her his eyes had a melancholy expression.

Now, as soon as John got away from her his tongue was unloosed, and he could say what he liked. He told his mother of his trouble and convinced her that it was impossible that he should tell Mary his love and ask her to marry him.

"Then" said his mother, "Mary must propose to you."

"She will never do that," sighed John.

"She must be made to. My son wishes her for a wife, and he must have her. Besides, Mary is a good girl and will have a good dowry. I wish her for a daughter-in-law. I have made up my mind that, since you are unable to ask Mary to be your wife, she shall claim you for her husband."

"And how will you do that, mother?"

"Never mind, so that I do it. We women have to get through the world by exercising our wits. We are not men, to force our way, so we have to plan."

Things went from bad to worse between John and Mary. Determined to force him to declare himself, she encouraged her former suitor. This made John ill, and so great was his ailing that his mother feared he would die. She went to Mary and, telling her of John's condition and the cause, begged her to do that which was expected of the sterner sex—ask John to be her husband. Mary vowed that she would be no man's wife who had not the courage to ask her, and, though John might die, she would not do his part for him.

Not long after this a sheep belonging to a neighbor was found in John Ochiltree's fold. John was arrested for sheep stealing and thrown into prison. "The lad has lost his mind for love of you," said John's mother to Mary. The lass was secretly troubled, but tossed her head and said that a man who was afraid of a girl had no mind to lose.

John was tried and convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

Then Mary began to regret that she had refused to be persuaded. But it was now too late. She had driven John into insanity, for she believed what his mother said, or she had unintentionally bewitched him so that he had stolen a sheep. She sat at home mourning her sad fate at loving a man so defective. John's mother brought a request from her son that Mary would be present at his execution. Mary declared that she could not endure such a sight and would not go. But she was at last persuaded to grant this last boon to a man she was now persuaded she had driven to the scaffold, and on the morning of the hanging she went there with her lover's mother.

A crowd was gathered around the culprit. John, with the rope around his neck, had ascended a few steps of the ladder. He stopped and, seeing Mary below, said to her:

"Mary, save me!"

"How can I do that, John?"

"It is the law that if one about to be executed be claimed in marriage by any woman he shall go free."

"Is that so?" Mary asked of the sheriff.

"If you claim this man in marriage I dare not hang him."

"Oh, Mary," cried John, "have mercy on me!"

"Save him," whispered the culprit's mother.

Mary hesitated. "No," she said at last; "let him hang."

John staggered, then seemed relieved. He climbed nimbly up the other rungs of the ladder, and the sheriff was about to swing him off when Mary cried:

"Hold! I claim this man in marriage!"

John was taken down, and the lovers, of whom the one couldn't and the other wouldn't till death was imminent, fell into each other's arms.

John's mother had stolen the sheep and placed it in her fold to bring about the result and force Mary to make the proposition. And yet we are told that women have not the heads that men have to accomplish results.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Sleepy Time Story About the Early Life of a Forest Tree.

HOW THE SEED WAS PLANTED

Many of Its Comrades Had Planned In Advance What They Were Going to Do, but Most of Them Perished—Good Work of a Squirrel.

Well, said Uncle Ben to Little Ned and Polly Ann, tonight I am going to tell the story of

THE LITTLE ACORN.

Once there was a beautiful big oak tree. It grew in the woods, and it was the only oak around there.

The oak was lonely, and so when fall came and the little acorns went pattering to the ground each was anxious to hide in a nice, safe place, so that when spring came they might send up little green shoots and grow up to be oak trees themselves.

Each little acorn as it swung on its branch looked about carefully for a nice place in which to fall.

"I'm going to drop right in the midst of that pile of leaves," said one. "The leaves will keep me warm when the winds blow and the snows fall, as they say they do in the winter."

"I am going to fall in the midst of that bank of soft earth. Then I can work my way down into the soil," said another acorn.

"I shall choose that marshy place over yonder," said a third acorn.

Every acorn had something to say except a little thing that grew on the lower limb. There wasn't much choice for him. By and by when the wind loosened his hold on the tree all he could do would be to fall on the rocks. There he had little chance of finding a place in which to grow, and there, without a cover, the first frosts of winter would pinch him to death. The other acorns did not even think it worth while to ask him where he meant to fall.

One morning the biggest acorn gave a groan.

"There's a squirrel coming up the tree," he said. And the tree began to shake so that the squirrel could not climb up and steal the acorns. The little gray squirrel had just got as far as the lower limb, and he grabbed the first acorn he could see and darted down the trunk with it. He ran to the little hole he had dug in the ground and popped the acorn in. But the squirrel did not bother going back to the tree that was so hard to climb.

After awhile the other acorns began to drop off, but the pile of leaves blew away and left that one to freeze. Another found the soil that looked so soft very hard to pierce, and a third rotted in the swamp.

When the spring came the only one that was alive was the acorn which the squirrel had buried in his little cellar and forgotten to dig up.

That acorn sent up a little green shoot, which became a tall sapling and in time an oak tree, the pride of the forest.

An Interesting Pair.

dogs and small dogs were there to be seen. Some won prizes and others did not, to the grief of their owners. Among the happy ones at the show was little Miss Iris de la Torre Bueno, whose Pekinese Alcelias Chum Chum, won a ribbon. Their pictures are here shown.

Those Glees and Glums Again.

"Now," said the Glums, "it's a dark, rainy day, and we'll just make little girl and little boy dull and cross!"

"No, you won't," answered the Glees, who happened to overhear the conversation. "We're just on the way to the nursery ourselves, and we're going to remind them of a whole lot of merry, pleasant things to do!"—Philadelphia Record.

TO ADD INTEREST TO THIS FASHIONABLE EVENT!

Women of Kingston and Vicinity Cordially Invited!

Exquisite" is the word which most adequately describes our New Hats for Spring—"Exquisite" in the softness and delicacy of the materials—"Exquisite" in their vivid smart colorings—"Exquisite" in their simplicity of design and trimming—"Exquisite" in their beauty of line. We've marshalled together.

A Dazzling Array of Beautiful Hats

featuring in hundreds of remarkable originations every style fancy brought forward by foreign and American designers, among the latter our own clever experts.

Paris Brought to New York--- New York Brought to Kingston!

While yet wielding the sceptre of authority, Paris no longer demands a personal pilgrimage of her subjects, but exports her ideas to New York, where they are left for execution. Why should the discriminating woman of Kingston find it necessary to do her buying in the metropolis? Each year, with the growth of The Paris Millinery Organization, the reason becomes less and less a good reason. We bring New York to Kingston. The best that New York has to offer is here at "The Paris," which fact will be practically demonstrated by a visit to our Opening Exhibition Saturday. There are not, nor will there be, the equal of our Hats in this city, nor will our prices be matched for equal qualities.

Come Saturday and See Hats That Are the Personification of Richness and Charm!

Admire effects showing the daring and skill exercised by the designers, colorists and milliners. The finished conceptions are tributes to the ingenuity and cleverness of the foremost American artists. Never in our experience has there been a more inviting Opening Display. There are scores of Hats for women to see, criticize and choose from if so inclined.

Come, Enjoy the Music, and View the Sort of Millinery That Will Measure Up to Your Easter Desires and Expectations

NARROW ESCAPE ON R. R. CROSSING

Barney Blakslee and Charles DeGraff Nearly Killed on Flatbush Crossing When Gates Were Dropped.

Barney Blakslee and Charles DeGraff, employed by Casper Bailey, the Broadway grocer, had a narrow escape from death or serious injury Thursday afternoon about 5 o'clock on the Flatbush avenue railroad crossing. They had been to Flatbush in the automobile delivery with groceries and were returning to Kingston. The crossing gates were up and they started the machine across the tracks. They had gotten but partly across when the gates were dropped. So close was the machine to the gates at the time that one of the gates struck the radiator of the machine.

A south bound train was approaching at full speed at the time and men along the track seeing the machine caught between the gates hastened up the track, signaling to the train to stop. In making an effort to get off the crossing one of the gates was smashed by the machine and it rolled off to safety just as the train shot by, the wind of it rustling in the ears of the men. The train had slowed down when it was signaled but owing to the speed it was being driven the engineer was unable to bring the train to a stop until it had ran some distance beyond the crossing.

GENERAL SARRAIL

ALLIED COMMANDER IN BALKANS TO WED FRENCH ARMY NURSE.

There have been many "war romances" since the beginning of the European conflagration, but the announcement of the engagement of General Maurice Sarrail, commander-in-chief of the Allied armies at Saloniki and in Macedonia, has brought to light a real one. General Sarrail is to wed Mlle. de Joannis, a member of the French nursing staff with General Sarrail's armies.

General Sarrail's command is one of the most picturesque in the history of the world, inasmuch as in it is represented almost every race which is fighting under the flags of the Allies. A prominent German general was credited with referring to it as an "army of hoodlums gathered from the ends of the earth."

THE EFFECT OF GOOD ROADS

Increase the Value of Tillable Farm Lands.

RESULT OF ECONOMIC SURVEY

Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering Has Made a Study of the Effect of Improved Highways Upon Farm Lands In Certain Counties of Different States.

To determine as far as possible the exact dollars and cents effect on a county of the improvement of bad roads, specialists of the office of public roads and rural engineering of the department of agriculture made economic surveys in eight counties in each of the years from 1910 to 1915, inclusive.

This study of the increase in the values of farm lands in the eight counties reveals the rather interesting fact that following the improvement of the main market roads the increase in the selling price of tillable farm lands served by the roads has amounted to from one to three times the total cost of the improvements. The increase in values in those instances which were recorded ranged from 63 per cent to 80 per cent in Spottsylvania county, Va.; from 68 to 194 in Dinwiddie county, Va.; 70 to 80 in Lee county, Va.; 25 to 100 in Wise county, Va.; 9 to 114 in Franklin county, N. Y.; 50 to 100 in Dallas county, Ala.; 25 to 50 in Lauderdale county, Miss., and from 50 to 100 in Manatee county, Fla. The estimates of increase were based for the most part upon the territory within a distance of one mile on each side of the roads improved.

In Spottsylvania county a careful record was made in 1910 of thirty-five farms located on the road selected for improvement. Of the seven farms sold in 1912 the prices actually paid show increases of from 37 to 116 per cent over the 1910 valuation. The average value after the roads were improved was $28.26 per acre as compared with $17.31 previous to the improvement. In 1913 four transfers of farm land were on the basis of $30.11 per acre, whereas the properties were listed in 1910 at only $13.89 per acre. It appears that the 1,451 acres sold in 1914 increased in value $28,500, or 80 per cent, or from $24.46 to $44.10 per acre.

In Dinwiddie county, Va., the actual price of forty-three farms sold or offered for sale from 1909 to 1914 ranged in price from $8.38 to $43.74 per acre before the roads were built and from $24.70 to $73.00 per acre after the roads were improved.

In Lee county, Va., a study of eight tracts along the roads before and after improvement indicated that these properties increased about 23 per acre, or about 70 per cent.

In Wise county, Va., a study of eight representative farms located on roads showed that they increased in value from an average of $49.06 per acre before improvement to $79.44 after the roads were improved. There were increases in valuation in other sections of from $60 to $90 or even $100 per acre.

In Franklin county, N. Y., the figures seem to indicate that the change from earth, sandy and loam roads to bituminous macadam was followed by increases averaging $12.50 per acre, or about 30.7 per cent.

In Dallas county, Ala., careful investigation seemed to indicate that road improvement has added at least $5 to each acre of land within a half mile of improved roads. Tracts sold at from $8 to $10 per acre were sold again after road improvement at from $20 to $25 per acre.

In Lauderdale county, Miss., the total assessed valuation of real property outside of the city was $2,757,546. This increased in 1914 after road improvement to $3,183,809, or 15.4 per cent.

In Manatee county, Fla., careful study of sales and real estate records indicated that the improvement of roads has added from 15 to 100 per cent, or at least $15 per acre, to the selling price of all lands within one-half mile of improved roads. This would give a total of $611,000, or more than twice the value of the bonds issued.

A Cent.

The habit of calling the cent piece of our American coinage a "penny" is utterly without foundation or excuse. We have no penny in our coinage. At one time half cent pieces were coined, but now the unit is a cent, the hundredth part of a dollar.

LUCKY STRIKE

It's toasted LUCKY STRIKE cigarette

IT'S toasted. The Burley tobacco in this delicious new Lucky Strike cigarette is toasted.

And you know how toasting does add flavor. Close your eyes and think of one crisp, brown slice of hot, buttered toast. Flavor is the word, isn't it?

This new application of an old idea has given you a new cigarette. You smokers have certainly been wanting a ready-made Burley cigarette. At first it couldn't be made; flavor didn't hold. But five years' study brought us to the toasting principle, by which we are able to hold the Burley flavor.

So now, try Lucky Strike, the real Burley cigarette; the tobacco — it's toasted. And the flavor — you'll certainly love it!

Central Hudson Line Expect to Get Through to Rondout at That Time —Ice Still Holds in River.

The ice in the Hudson river at this point is still holding, although in spots it is badly rotted by the warm weather, and the only open water is the track of the Transport which is making regular trips encountering no difficulty since trips for the season were resumed. The upper creek ice is also holding but the lower Rondout creek from a point near the Island Dock is open to the mouth.

With the ice still holding in the river the Cornell line is not getting any tugs ready to go into commission as yet. The tug Rol at the present time is the only tug ready to go out, and has been used to break up the creek ice. At the Central Hudson line office today it was stated that it was expected to have a boat through to Rondout some time next week unless unforeseen conditions arose. Just what boat of the line will make an effort to get through at that time is not known.

ULSTER FRUIT THE FINEST.

Mohican Enterprise a Liberal Education to Home Folks.

Ulster county fruit is being exhibited and sold by the Mohican Company in its Wall street store and, in color and taste, is far superior to the celebrated Hood river and other Pacific coast orchard products, the same as was demonstrated at the Panama-Pacific Expositions where J. A. Hopworth and Son of Milton, carried off five premiums in the nation-wide apple competition. At the State Fruit Growers' Association eastern meeting in Poughkeepsie last month, this same grower and others of Ulster county carried off the honors. Ninety-eight per cent of the fruit exhibited there was purchased by the Mohican people and the local sale is a liberal education for Ulster county consumers of the beauties and fine qualities of our home-grown fruit. The Hudson valley fruit standard is fast coming into its own with discriminating buyers of apples and a few more years will see the Hudson valley mark at the top of the heap.

Quiet in Recorder's Court.

After a lively session all week in recorder's court things simmered down, and today Recorder Lang found a clean docket awaiting him when he convened court this morning, as no cases were brought to his attention by the police, and not even a complaint was lodged with him. Those who have followed the happenings of court are of the impression that the fact that lately Recorder Lang has been sending so many to the pen at Albany has had something to do with things being quiet as none of the local talent has any love for the pen where they are forced to work. As one old offender has often said, "Give me six months in the county jail instead of one week in the Albany pen."

Musical Comedy This Evening.

"When Dreams Come True," which appears at the Kingston Opera House tonight, is the first musical comedy written by Philip Bartholomae, the author of "Little Miss Brown," "Over Night," and "Very Good Eddie." The comedy appeared at the opera house about a year and a half ago and is pleasantly recalled by everyone who saw that performance. The chorus numbers twenty-four exceptionally handsome and shapely young girls, who act as a background for the principals and wear some of the most stunning gowns ever shown on the musical comedy stage.

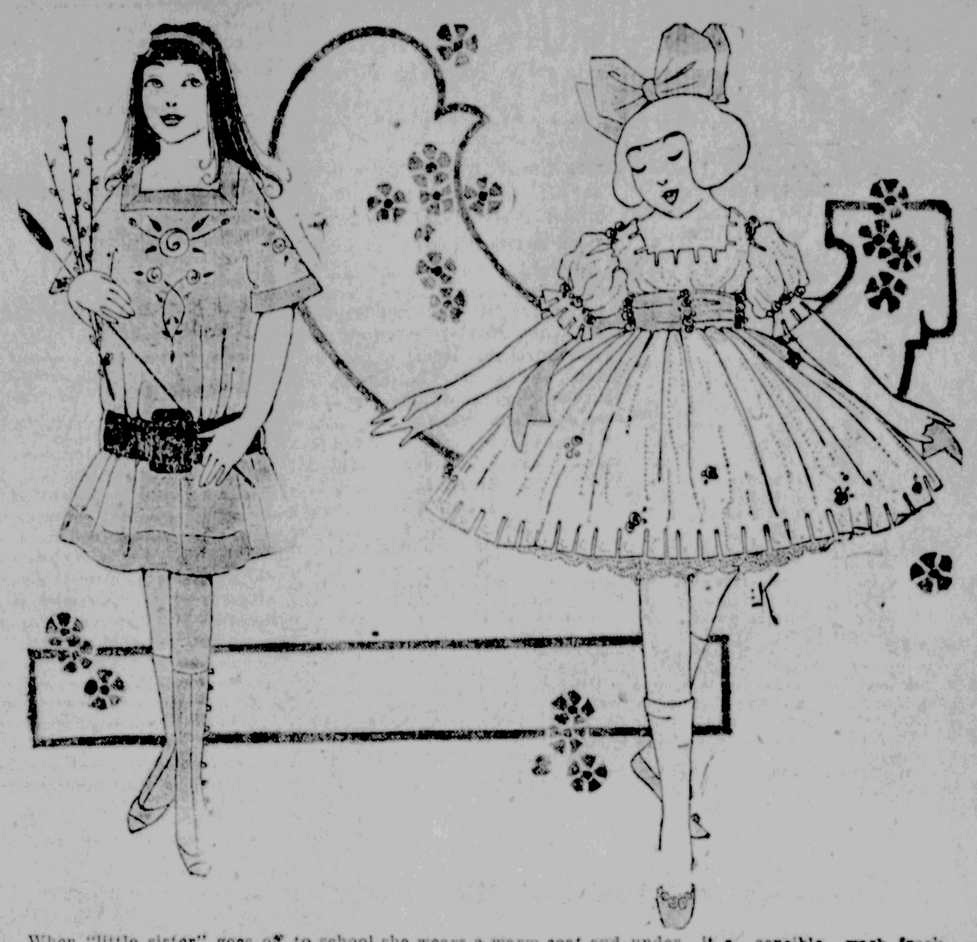
Another "Flash Signal" Story.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 16.—The navy department today denied two interned German sailors were shot by American sentries at the Philadelphia navy yard when suspected of signalling with flashes. It was explained that the supposed flashes were caused by the sentry pacing up and down in front of the lighted portholes of one of the German ships.

Improvements at County Jail.

Sealed bids are being solicited for the repair of the toilets and other work in the Ulster county jail, and plans and specifications are on file at the office of the clerk of the board of county auditors at the court house. Bids will be opened at the office on the evening of April 5.



When "little sister" goes off to school she wears a warm coat and under it a sensible wash frock, which she may be permitted to "muss up" with right good will. The dress is of brown linen of that soft shade called "cafe-au-lait," cut in one straight piece like the chemise frocks of the grown ups, and it is broadly girdled at the waist by a brown suede belt, whose rich, dark shade just matches the bands which finish hem and neck and sleeves.

A very dress-up "party frock" is this. And yet deft fingers may fashion it at little expense. Kate Greenaway would not have disowned the little costume of white net over pale pink lawn or china silk. The puffed sleeves end in daring cuffs cut in deep squares like those which finish hem and neck. A blue ribbon sash is held on the band of tiny rosebuds, and, if mother chooses, rosebuds may be scattered lavishly all over the frock.

Rounded Corners Popular.

Rounded corners at road intersections are made at all important crossroads and at the junctions of all roads where the traffic is sufficiently heavy to warrant it in Crawford county, Ia. This practice, according to the service bulletin of the Iowa state highway commission, is regarded with so much favor by the farmers that they donate the land required for extra width in the right of way.

Donkeys In Trousers.

The stranger in Guayaquil, in Ecuador, at once remarks one very curious feature of its life and general appearance. We are used to seeing nets over our horses in the summer, but such an outfit as is required by the donkeys in the tropics strikes the stranger as ludicrous. The donkeys are numerous in the city and are used for all manner of load purposes, from baskets of fruit to the carcasses of butcher's meat. In the morning a string of them may be seen trotting through the streets with a load of fresh meat from the slaughter house, which is situated outside the town. The donkeys are all provided with coverings around the fore legs, like ordinary trousers, and with a protection over the ears against the mosquitoes. The Guayaquil donkey presents a most comical appearance in trousers, especially if his garment is embroidered, as it sometimes is.

American Mineral Oil

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Use of Mineral Oil.

Dr. Le Tanneur contributes to the Paris Medical some practical points in the use of mineral oil in constipation. The oil, he says, is in no way digested or even modified by the juices of the stomach and intestines. It acts as a lubricant and nothing else, though it tends to heal abrasions of the intestinal wall caused by rough particles of food.

The New York Medical Journal says mineral oil should be taken either before breakfast or after dinner, two tablespoonfuls being a dose. Its use should be continued every day for at least a fortnight, when the bowels will continue to work naturally without it, for the mineral oil is in no sense a cathartic, but it will cure constipation.—Kingston Daily Freeman, February 17, 1917.

Rosendale, March 16.—The funeral of Herman Greser of LeFever Falls was held in the Reformed Church of this village on Wednesday afternoon, the Rev. Joseph Millett of Tillson officiating. There was a goodly attendance, considering the day. The floral pieces were many and beautiful. Mr. Greser was a faithful attendant at the church, whenever his health would permit. CLAY LODGE LEADS PINOCHLE LEAGUE

C. S. Clay Lodge of Odd Fellows still leads in the Odd Fellows' Pinochle League of the city with Aretas Lodge a close second. Games in the league are scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and the interest is keen with all four lodges hoping to be in the lead before the season closes on March 28, when the winners will be tendered a dinner by the losers.

This pinochle contest between the local Odd Fellow lodges has now become an annual event. Captain Jacob Port of Clay Lodge is positive that his experts will retain the lead, but Captain Ray Whitbeck of Kosciusko Lodge and Captain David Bush of Aretas Lodge are banking on the new style of play that they have been developing.

Captain Bush is not only studying out new plays, but he is busy perfecting new combinations and when not experimenting on other Odd Fellows he is springing some new dope on the letter carriers at the post office. Judge McKenzie of the Port Ewen Lodge states that while his team may now be in last place that they will soon climb out of the cellar.

The standing in the Pinochle League to date follows:

BRILLIANT FINISH OF FASHION SHOW

Actors Scored Even Greater Hit in Second Production—Send-off for Bridal Party—Charitable Institutions to Benefit.

A packed house on Thursday afternoon and full houses on Thursday evening brought the Van Wagenen Fashion Show and Benefit to a most successful close, from every viewpoint. The actors, having gained confidence by the Wednesday afternoon's performance, that of Thursday, was even better than on the preceding day. A few additional gowns of handsome design and texture were shown, as were numerous elegant separate coats and hats for older women. One thing is sure, the Fashion Show has set the spring and summer standard for the best dressed women of this city, who will find at the Van Wagenen store, not only all of the very stylish and handsome garments and hats shown at the Fashion Show, but many others of equal elegance, especially for the matrons and women who have passed their twentieth birthday.

A few changes were also made in the program of music, which opened and closed, as on Wednesday, with the exceedingly graceful and winsome dancing of Miss Margaret Richards, in "A Dance of the Blue Bells," and of Miss Agnes Dorsey in the oriental "Nautch Veil Dance." Miss Stern, soprano soloist, again delighted the audience with her singing, and charm of personality, her rendition of "A May Morning" by Denza, being remarkably fine. As Mr. Dodge was unable to be present on Thursday, Thomas Crosby, pianist, acted most acceptably and efficiently as accompanist to Miss Stern and also to Harry Clearwater, basso, who most graciously, at the eleventh hour sang in place of Mr. La Tour, who had developed a distressing cold in the throat. Mr. Clearwater sang "The Sunshine of Your Smile," by Cooke, and "The Song of Steel" by Spross, the rich quality of his voice and the excellence of his musicianship—he, too is a pupil of Mrs. Hemstreet—being admirably displayed in both numbers which were heartily encored. In the "Rondino" by Kreisler, and the "Simple Confession" by Thome, Earle Hummel violinist, showed a finish and beauty of executions and perfection of tone, that might well have been the envy of many a now noted concert violinist.

The orchestra, too, added some of the very latest music, just received from New York, to their afternoon and evening repertoire.

A few impromptu innovations in the playlet made decided hits with the audience. In the afternoon, Kenneth Archer's toy Boston bull dog came to the afternoon tea and plainly showed himself to be thoroughly accustomed to high social life, while the young ladies all vied with each other in looking for "Trouble," and giving him a welcome.

In the evening, the audience was given a surprise, in the appearance among the wedding guests, of an elderly but distinguished appearing gentleman and lady, who proved to be E. F. MacFadden, the head of the L. B. Van Wagenen Company, and Mrs. C. N. Reed, who had arranged the musical program of the Fashion Show.

The wedding scene was further enlivened by the sudden disappearance of the bride and groom, whose luggage, in the meantime had been appropriately "decorated." The entire performance closed with the return of the bridal couple in traveling costume, which was the signal for a storm of confetti, and a grand rush for safety from the hands of the admiring friends.

Incidentally it was hoped that the audience took in the latest "finger" hand shake, which has socially superceded the "pump handle style," and which was introduced by Mr. Richards, who so successfully staged the entire production. Also it should be noted that a gold-mounted lorgnette from the Safford jewelry store on Wall street gives a decided "air" to the user. Too much praise cannot be given to the participants in the performance, Mrs. Jane Crosby Teller, as "Dame Fashion;" Kenneth E. Archer, as "A Man of the Hour;" the Misses Caroline Oppenheimer, Winifred Smith, Anna Roach, Margaret Dorsey, Edith Gakenheimer, Nina Smith, Mabel Barber, Frances Costello, Clara Gilbert, Mildred Van Wert, Ruth Terwilliger, Olive Clearwater, Stela McNeis, Lillian Hermann, Leona Grant, Agnes Dorsey, Margaret Richards, Mrs. Spencer Ennist, Mrs. Harold Osterhoudt; Miss Hazel Newkirk of Weehawken, Miss Charlotte Haley of Saugerties, Miss Blanche Dibbell of Tannersville; Messrs. Russell Dana, Ray Everett, Alton Miller, Walter Baisden, Alexander Rodie and John Cashin, all guests of Dame Fashion; the Misses Mary Forde and Vola Berryan, the maids; for the whole-hearted and most efficient manner in which they entered into the spirit of the occasion, making of it such a success and therefore such financial aid to the Woman's Auxiliaries of the Kingston City Hospital, the Benedictine Sanitarium and the Y. M. C. A. In counting up the successes of the entertainment, mention should also, most gratefully be made of the untiring and efficient services of all those young women and men, who behind the scenes made possible the rapid changes of attire and stage setting, for without their aid the smoothness of the production would have been impossible.

It is known that a goodly sum has been realized for the auxiliaries, but the exact sum will not be known for a day or two. A contribution of $5 from Mrs. J. T. Maxwell of Saugerties for the "Cause" is hereby gratefully acknowledged.

Fun With the Wrong Man

What Might Have Been a Serious Blunder Comes Out Right

By WILL S. GIDLEY

Copyright by Will S. Gidley.

On that day the Argus staff had had an unusually trying time of it. To begin with, the press dispatches had consisted chiefly of Russian war news, which had been pouring in steadily all day, filled with an unusual and most discouraging quantity of unpronounceable and unspellable names—that is, to any one except an expert in Russian and Asiatic nomenclature. To an ordinary editor, proofreader or typesetter they were simply so many jagged mountain chains of consonants, with an occasional vowel thrown in for good measure. To cap the climax one of the hand set columns got knocked into "pi" just as the paper was about ready for the press, which made a great improvement in the spelling of some of the names, but ruined the article in other respects.

The result was—well, the Argus got out about on time, but as managing editor of the paper Barney Blake had no reason to feel proud of that particular column of war news as it appeared in print. Some of it was still pi, but it came out all right in the second edition, also in the third and fourth. Blake saw to that personally, as he expected Colonel Starbuck, the proprietor of the Daily Argus, in some time during the afternoon, and, knowing him to be of an excitable temperament—the colonel often swore the Argus with its blunders would be the death of him—he did not care particularly to have him see that dispatch as originally printed.

The colonel failed to show up at the usual hour, however, and Barney was rather glad than otherwise that he didn't.

What he needed—in fact, what the entire Argus staff needed just then—was a little wholesome recreation instead of an interview with or a lecture from Colonel Starbuck—something to take off the tension instead of screwing it up tighter.

It is no wonder, then, that when an unexpected opportunity for innocent fun presented itself Barney joyfully and eagerly seized upon it and made the most of it.

The opportunity in question came in the shape of a caller—one of the oddest looking fish that had drifted into the Argus office in many moons.

One quick glance at the linen duster which hung loosely about his robust form and the last year's straw hat perched on the back of his head, and Barney had sized him up for a horny handed agriculturist—probably one of the country subscribers coming in, as they frequently did, to look over the

THE OPPORTUNITY CAME IN THE SHAPE OF A CALLER.

Argus establishment and see the modus operandi of getting out a daily newspaper.

"Hello, Uncle Horace! Looking for any one in particular?" saluted Blake as the man with airy toga and out of date headgear paused inside the doorway and glanced inquiringly around the room.

"How did you happen to light on to my cog-no-men before I even opened my trapdoor?" queried the caller whimsically. "I always heard the Argus had a mighty smart staff, and now I know it. Reckon you must be the—er—society editor, eh?"

"No; I'm only the managing editor," explained Barney. "The society editor is the chap in the corner with the chrysanthemum hair and a rose in his buttonhole. You will also recognize him by the diamond ring that flashes on his 'write' hand as he dashes off his eloquent and sparkling society bonmots and his fascinating description of Mrs. Brown's colonial ball, Mrs. O'Rafferty's French fete, Mrs. Robinson's Italian musicale or Mrs. John Q. Smith's Japanese lawn party. Oh, he's a genius—our society editor."

"You don't say!"

"Yes. The paper simply couldn't exist without him."

"That so? Queer Colonel Starbuck never told me anything about him," mused the caller.

"Oh, you know the colonel, do you?" asked Blake.

"Yes, we're what I might call slightly acquainted. I had a little business transaction with him the other day."

"Sold you a gold brick, I suppose," and Barney winked humorously at the rest of the staff.

"Don't know yet whether it will turn out to be a gold brick or not. Reckon I shan't worry any if it does. I've invested in gold bricks before, and the way I figure it it's nobody's business but my own if I do it again."

"Oh, I see," said Barney smoothly. "A trifle touchy on the gold brick question, eh, Mr.—er—Hayseed, is it?"

"Not quite. Hayden happens to be my name. Didn't make quite as slick a guess as you did on the Horace. But go ahead and call me Hayseed if you like. You can remember that name better than Hayden probably, and I guess it fits me about as well as the other, anyhow. Don't it strike you that way?"

"Oh, no, you're no hayseed! You're right from Chicago or New York city—anybody could tell that from the cut of your jib!" And Barney again passed the wink to the others, who all felt in duty bound to roar at the managing editor's wit.

"Nice, genial staff you've got. Chuck full of fun, ain't they? I hope they're not laughing at me. Hain't got a 'Please Kick Me' sign pinned to my back, have I?"

"That's all right, Uncle Horace," purred Barney. "Don't go to getting excited. The boys are just spoiling for a little fun—been working under steam pressure today—but none of them would ever be guilty of—er—by George, they have, just the same! But it doesn't read, 'Please Kick Me;' it says, 'We're From the Farm.' And if I only knew the deep dyed villain who pinned it on you I'd discharge him this instant—yes, sir, this very instant—and I'd tell him not to come around again until tomorrow morning," he added in a stage whisper as he stepped around behind the rural looking visitor and removed the offending sign, deftly replacing it by another handed him by one of the crowd, reading, "Turnips For Sale."

"There; that looks better," observed Barney, at which everybody roared promptly once more.

"Not quite so much levity, boys," said Barney reprovingly. "I am going to show our friend here through the Argus establishment, and I want to see how well you can behave while"—

Biff!

A big wad of paper came sailing across the office and caromed on the ear of the caller.

"That was our baseball editor who did that," explained Barney coolly. "Force of habit, I suppose. He probably imagined he was throwing a ball at first base. Don't let that happen again, Higgins."

"All right, sir," glibly responded the young man who had thrown the paper. "Mistake, anyhow. I was aiming at the wastebasket."

"Well, seeing you've apologized, it is all right," said Barney, with mock solemnity.

"Now, Mr. Hayseed—I should say Hayden—you have already been introduced to our baseball and society editors, and if you will cast your optics over the rest of the collection of geniuses before you I will enlighten you as to their duties, so that when you go back to the farm you will understand the secret of the Argus' success in gathering and disseminating the daily news of the entire world, including the city and county of Boomopolis.

"The exceedingly tall, thin young man with the short hair and prominent ears is Mr. Perkins, our secret service reporter and war correspondent. His build, as you will notice, fits him admirably for the position. He is so thin he can crawl over a transom without the slightest difficulty."

"You don't say!"

"Fact, I assure you. And that is why a thin man has a marked advantage over a 200 pounder. It requires less gas to carry him, and if he falls from a balloon it doesn't muss him up so much as it would a fat man, thereby effecting a big saving in doctors' bills for repairing broken ribs, etc."

"I see. Quite an idea, that."

"Yes, and, besides, a thin man occupies less space and leaves more room in the basket of the balloon for the wireless message apparatus. You see, as fast as the war correspondent in a balloon gets a message ready to send in to the paper he grinds it out on a wireless sending machine, something like a phonograph, and it goes flying off into space until it strikes the Aerial Wireless Telegraph line, over which it whizzes through the air with almost lightning speed until it reaches the Argus office. It would do you good to see our office boy catching the messages in a wire basket as they come flying in at the window."

"Well, well!"

"Oh, I tell you there is a pile to learn about the newspaper business when a fellow once sets about it. Now, I rather imagine you've learned a few things in that line today, Mr. Hayseed—I mean Hayden—that you never knew before."

"I reckon I have picked up just a few stray hints about the newspaper business," drawled the man in the linen duster, and then he suddenly straightened up, and the awkward countryman of a moment before was transformed into something quite different as he went on in crisp, business-like tones: "Exceedingly valuable ones, too, most of them. Now, seeing I have been running a newspaper myself for the past fifteen years, I had a glimmering sort of an idea when I drifted in here today that possibly I knew something about the business, but I find I was mistaken. I'm only a jibbering idiot in the newspaper business, from the Argus standpoint, and, having bought the paper, I've got to start in at the bottom and learn the trade all over again from its highly accomplished and courteous staff. Good joke on me, Mr. Blake, isn't it?"

Barney—not to mention the rest of the Argus staff—looked as if it would be a great relief to him at that moment if the earth were to open and swallow up the entire establishment.

"W-why—er—who—who are you?" he stammered uneasily.

"I? Oh, I'm nobody much. I'm only Uncle Horace, the old hayseed that dropped in on you a few minutes ago to take lessons in journalism and the art of entertaining callers. But here comes Colonel Starbuck. Perhaps I can get him to introduce me. How are you, colonel? A trifle late in keeping your appointment, aren't you?"

"Why, how d'ye do, major?" exclaimed Colonel Starbuck cordially. "I am sorry I've kept you waiting, but it has given you a chance to learn something about the Argus establishment and the staff."

"W-WHY—ER—WHO—WHO—ARE YOU?" HE STAMMERED UNEASILY.

"Yes, it has," interposed the caller dryly.

"Pretty bright looking crowd, major, aren't they? Boys, this is Major Hayden, the former owner and editor of the Centerville Courier. He has bought out my interests in the Argus, taking possession at once, and I trust the new relationship between you as employer and"—

"Hello! What has been going on here? What is that sign you are carrying around on your back, major? Here, let me remove it. 'Turnips For Sale,' eh? I surely hope that miserable attempt at wit was not placed on your back by any one connected with this establishment."

"I am afraid it was, colonel," was the calm reply. "You see, the boys mistook me for one of your rural subscribers, and they have been having some amusement at my expense. But I see they are pretty well worked up over it, so perhaps we had better finish our interview in your private office and give our humorous friends a chance to think the matter over quietly by themselves."

Half an hour later when the new proprietor of the Argus emerged from the inner sanctum he found a rather solemn looking crowd awaiting his appearance, and Barney Blake's erstwhile smiling countenance was the most sepulchrally solemn of them all as he stepped forward and gravely handed him a folded document.

Opening it, Mr. Hayden read as follows:

Major Hayden:

Dear Sir—We have had our innings, and it is now your turn. As the future proprietor of the Daily Argus you doubtless will not care to retain in your employ the staff of long eared, unmitigated donkeys now connected with the paper, and we herewith hand you our resignations, to take effect immediately, together with our apologies for the unpardonable treatment received by you at our hands this afternoon.

This note was signed by Managing Editor Blake and the other members of the Argus staff, and below the signatures was the following postscript:

P. S.—The boys were bound to share the blame equally with myself and hand in their resignations with mine, but as I am the head of the office and the others took their cue from me I feel that I alone should shoulder the responsibility for what occurred, and as an act of justice to my fellow employees I ask that my resignation alone be accepted and that no one else shall be made to suffer for my fault. The rest of the boys are a pretty good lot. They will serve you faithfully and redeem themselves in your eyes, I am sure, if you will give them a chance. Yours respectfully,

BARNEY BLAKE.

"Resignations declined with thanks! You are all going to stick right to your jobs until I tell you different," announced Major Hayden bluntly as he finished reading the above communication and, tearing it into strips, dropped it into the wastebasket. "You've had your lesson, boys, and I guess there isn't much danger of any more such exhibitions as we have had here this afternoon. I'm willing to try you anyhow.

"But I'm glad you added that postscript, Mr. Blake," he concluded, reaching over and giving Barney's hand a hearty shake. "It has a manly ring to it, and I reckon we'll get along together all right."

WHITMAN SIGNS TWO LOCAL BILLS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, March 16.—(Special)—Governor Whitman today signed two bills introduced by Senator Walton and affecting Ulster county. One authorizes the town of Gardiner to issue bonds to the amount of $9,000 to pay the town's indebtedness to the county, on account of taxes cancelled and rejected by the state comptroller and to pay the town's expenses incurred in the proceedings in supreme court to assess New York city property in the township.

The second bill authorizes a bond issue in the town of Shawangunk for similar purposes.

UNANIMOUS FOR RETURN OF PASTOR

The last quarterly conference of the St. James M. E. Church was held Thursday evening and was largely attended, nearly every member being present. It has been a year of harmony and prosperity. The reports of the work, of the pastor, Sunday school, Epworth League, Senior and Junior Ladies' Aid Societies, Woman's Foreign and Woman's Home Missionary Societies, and Queen Esther Circle were all of a most encouraging character. Altogether it has been the best year in the history of St. James's for a long period, both financially and in adding to the membership. Notes have been wiped out and all bills paid, while unity and peace prevail.

The action of the official board in inviting Dr. Baragwanath to return was most enthusiastically inforced, and the district superintendent, Dr. R. E. Bell, who presided, was requested by a rising vote to use his influence with the bishop to have the unanimous request of St. James's Church granted—the return of the pastor. Both pastor and the church are to be congratulated.

The stewards and committees were elected for another year. W. F. Dedrick was elected delegate to the Layman's Association, and D. G. Atkins, reserve. The New York Conference will be held in the Washington Square Church, New York city, where Dr. Baragwanath was formerly pastor. The conference will meet April 4 and will be presided over by Bishop L. B. Wilson, who was the president of the conference held in St. James's Church this city five years ago.

MEDIATION MAY PREVENT STRIKE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

RAILROADS ARE REFUSING FREIGHT

Passenger Service on O. & W. and West Shore May Also be Affected by the Strike, if a Strike Comes.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Cleveland, O., March 16.—The New York Central, Nickel Plate, Baltimore and Ohio and Erie railroads late today declared embargoes on all freight. Their freight offices were instructed to receive no freight for shipment after midnight.

The New York Central today notified all big shippers that until further notice no freight would be received at Rhinecliff. At the freight house of the West Shore it was stated that there was a partial embargo, the railroad refusing to accept perishable goods. If the railroad outlook remains serious it is likely that the West Shore will refuse to accept any freight but up to this afternoon had not received any orders. The O. & W., which uses the same terminal as the West Shore at Weehawken, have given notice that, owing to the yardmen probably being involved in the strike, all train service will, including passenger trains, be uncertain and trains may be annulled without notice.

Bockwurst at Lay's

No matter the weather, the early or tardy arrival of Spring, Bockwurst makes its appearance with unfailing regularity at this period every year, and although the delicious tidbits are made for only a brief period, the demand for them grows greater each succeeding Spring. Bockwursts produce energy and nerve-power, possessing nutritive properties which build a vitality and force. They furnish enjoyment and satisfaction. It i called Bockwurst because it is a rare, seasonable treat, like Bock beer, and has absolutely no connection with the goat. Lean veal, pork, strictly fresh eggs, crackers, chives, etc., are its chief ingredients, judiciously proportioned to produce an always-to-be-remembered delicious flavor. Order Bockwurst Saturday.

Martin O'Connor, Amanuensis

Why He Loved St. Patrick's Day.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Patrick O'Connor came to America when he was a mere lad and by dint of hard work and perseverance made a fortune. He left a sister in Ireland who married Daniel O'Malley, and she was seperated from her brother for many years. He was used to sending her money occasionally, and after awhile, when she had grown older, she would sometimes depute her adopted daughter, Aileen, who was coming to womanhood, to thank her brother for his benefactions. The truth is that the woman had not been very well educated, and Aileen, having more advantages, was better fitted for these replies. As the years rolled by and O'Connor became more and more prosperous it seemed to his sister that his letters showed a better education than at first. The fact is that he turned over a part of his correspondence to his son, Martin, and it occasionally became Martin's part to write these check bearing letters to his aunt, but he wrote them in his father's name.

One day Martin opened the mail in his father's absence and read a letter of thanks for a remittance. It was written in Mrs. O'Malley's name, but Martin saw plainly that it had not been written by her. It bore the impress of a young girl, and a very intelligent girl at that. There was real gratitude in it, and it was overflowing with kindliness as well. It seemed to Martin that an emanation from a lovely girl had been wafted across the ocean and entered his heart.

The next time Mr. O'Connor gave his son a check to send to Mrs. O'Malley Martin wrote a letter which was meant for a reply to the one last received. One not knowing the relationship between the two correspondents would have supposed that it had been written to a girl instead of his aunt Mrs. O'Malley concluded that her brother was becoming very affectionate in his old age. It was couched in such kindly terms that she commissioned Aileen to express for her her appreciation of her brother's interest in her and assure him that his sister had not lost any of her affection for him during their long separation.

Aileen, feeling that she was writing from a sister to a brother, did not scruple to express all the affection her mother desired she should express for Mr. O'Connor. When the recipient read it he wondered at this unusual demonstration of affection, but set it down to the fact that his sister was growing old and as persons age their affection for those of their own blood ripens. Being a man of business and undemonstrative, he [illegible] his letter to his son and told him to reply in kind.

In this way a correspondence grew up between Martin O'Connor and Aileen, the one writing supposedly to her uncle, the other presumably to his aunt, which grew warmer and warmer till the letters between the brother and sister became almost loverlike.

Whether Martin was really falling in love with his aunt or whether he suspected the old lady had employed an amanuensis doesn't appear, but one thing is certain—the letters he received became in time so affectionate that whenever he saw one delivered by the postman written in the well known hand he appropriated it to himself, and his father never saw it. It is quite likely that Aileen did the same with those letters that came from America.

When love's quicksilver had attained a considerable height Martin began to think that he would like to investigate this aunt of his to whom he was making a semi-brotherly love and see if her earthly part was as beautiful as her soul. He began to express to his father a desire for a trip abroad and especially to visit the green isle where his ancestors had lived and died. He became very pathetic over a plot of ground his father had often described to him where the O'Connors were moldering. An O'Connor had been a bishop, and Martin expressed himself as desirous of visiting the grave of this eminent son of the church.

Mr. O'Connor, much pleased that his son should take this interest in his ancestors, who, by the bye, had from time immemorial been stalwart churchgoers, consented that Martin should go abroad in the early spring, and Martin suggested that it would be well for him to time his visit for St. Patrick's day.

"The very thing," said Mr. O'Connor. "You may attend services on that anniversary in the very church where Bishop O'Connor preached."

Martin sailed early in March arranging to be with his aunt on the 17th, which every one with Irish blood in his veins knows is St. Patrick's day. Before saying goodby to him his father whispered in his ear:

"Be sure to make it plain to your aunt that I'm very fond of her, and all that. You know how to say such things better than I do, and I rely on you to express my feelings."

"Trust me for that, father," said Martin. "I'll do it warmly."

A letter came from the young man postmarked London stating that he was about to leave for the home of the O'Connors the next day. Later a long letter was received describing his meeting with his aunt and how he spent St. Patrick's day. "In company, it said, "with that beloved woman who has written her brother such beautiful letters I attended services, sitting directly under the pulpit where our great Bishop O'Connor preached those soul stirring sermons. Later we visited the plot where the O'Connors are buried, and I sat beside my aunt on a stone beneath which Fergus O'Connor, my great-grandfather, rests. It seemed to me that the family affection for which our ancestors were marked was rising, a sort of ethereal aroma. Something struck a responsive chord in my heart and set it vibrating. So affected was I that I drew my aunt to me, kissed her and whispered in her ear, 'Dear heart, I bear you all the love of the O'Connors from the day when the first O'Connor spoke of love to our first maternal ancestor.'"

This part of the letter met with an enthusiastic response from Patrick O'Connor and all his family. The good man rejoiced that in his son he had one to make up for his own undemonstrative nature. "I wonder," he said, "that the boy could have felt so much affection for an old woman even though she be his father's sister."

"You forget," said Mrs. O'Connor, "that Martin was expressing your feelings for his aunt."

"You're right," was the reply. "I didn't think of it in that light. Martin is a very good boy and loves me as a son should love a father."

Martin's letters after that all smacked of that St. Patrick's day he had spent with his beloved aunt. Everything that happened seemed to turn upon that eventful anniversary. A package of books came across the ocean from Martin, and every book was on the subject of St. Patrick.

"The boy shows great enthusiasm for his church," said his mother. "Please God he may be a priest."

If the cathedrals Martin visited in company with his aunt was any criterion he bade fair to be an archbishop. He seemed to be forever dawdling about the grounds in which these holy edifices stood, and the depth of his feelings seemed to come through his aunt, who was always exciting in him some pure emotion.

Martin's time abroad was limited. His father, who was getting old, relied much upon him in the conduct of his affairs and wrote him not on any account to overstay his leave. On receipt of this letter Martin wrote that he had grown so fond of his aunt that it had become impossible to tear himself away from her. He would not overstay his leave, but this was because she had consented to go to America with him to visit her dear brother.

Patrick O'Connor was appalled at this. So long as she was absent from him he could satisfy his demonstrative nature through his son, but if she were with him this would devolve upon himself. As to embracing his sister, sitting beside her holding her hand or with his arm around her waist, he could not do so even with his wife. However, he could think of no way to head off his sister's visit and prepared to show as much affection as possible.

It was the month of June when Martin sailed from Ireland. St. Patrick's day had gone by three months before, but Martin still harped upon it in his letters, and even the month of roses, though it seemed to appeal very strongly to the young man, was no more dear to him than the month of wiads and dust. Still, he had written that he could not possibly return till June, and there appeared to be some especial reason for the delay.

There were a good many things about the return of Martin O'Connor that his parents could not understand. In the first place he announced that he had decided since he had been away from home to live thereafter under his own roof tree and to go there as soon as he had reached home. He would take his aunt with him for a housekeeper. The only comfort to be derived by his parents from this was by his father, who was relieved to know that he would not have to sit holding his sister's hand, with an occasional kiss. Martin was the apple of his eye, and, although he was loath to lose the boy from his home, he fitted up a house for him that it might be ready against his return.

Martin arrived in the evening and drove to his bachelor quarters, where the O'Connor family were waiting for him and his aunt. When the front door was opened and Patrick O'Connor saw his sister he exclaimed:

"Upon my word, Nora, you're not a bit older than you were thirty years ago."

"I'm not Nora," she said on throwing her arms about Mr. O'Connor; "I'm Aileen O'Connor, your sister's adopted daughter."

A bewildered look came over the man's face; then an idea seemed to be boring its way into his brain. Turning to his son, he said:

"Mart."

"Well, dad, what is it?"

"What made you suddenly so fond of St. Patrick's day?"

"Well, to tell the truth, dad, in the morning Aileen and I went to mass in the church where Bishop O'Connor once preached, and in the evening we sat on his tomb. I telling her that I loved her and must take her back to America with me as my wife."

"And what's all this about your aunt?"

"You remember that you asked me to answer my aunt's letters to you. Well, Aunt Nora deputed Aileen to reply to the replies. The result was that I fell in love with my aunt and Aileen fell in love with her uncle. And there you are!"

St. Patrick's day is the principal anniversary celebrated in Martin O'Connor's family.

GREEN MT. GIRLS TO PLAY IN CITY

K. H. S. Talent Arrange Game With Bennington Aggregation—Season Nears End With Monticello, Rhinebeck and Midgets Games.

The basketball season at the high school will just about wind up Saturday when the Midgets and the varsity play their last games, at Albany and Monticello respectively. The girls are to play at Rhinebeck on that date and besides have scheduled a post-season contest with the Bennington, Vt., high school, champions of southern Vermont and northern New York, who will meet the locals in this city some time in April.

Championship games seem to be the hobby of the Midgets. Their Albany opponents Saturday will be the Cathedral Academy Midgets, who number among their conquered scalps those of the Christian Brothers' Academy, also of Albany. This latter team defeated the local Midgets in a championship game in this city some time ago and so the Cathedral boys are now in possession of the title for eastern New York. With the hope of capturing the coveted laurels from them the locals are to make an onslaught on this fast team, with the firm resolve to bring back the spoils. Their ranks are up to par, none of the players being ineligible because of low marks.

The varsity's last game of the year will be one of the hardest, if Monticello's playing is of the same standard as that shown here in the first contest between the two teams a few weeks ago. The visitors displayed the best form of any visiting team in Kingston this year and made the locals hustle to get the verdict, though the court was unfamiliar to them. The guard work of the maroon five will be weakened by the ineligibility of Hallinan, whose bunk will be taken by one of the Wilsons, Treadwell or Williams.

Lest they get consumptive by suddenly quitting the game after their stiff season, the girls decided to ease up gradually and clinch more strongly the valley championship by engaging with the Rhinebeck maidens on their own soil Saturday afternoon. The locals have won both of the former encounters.

As publicity agents for spreading the name of the high school about the sporting world the girls should be awarded the ribbon. Having heard in their wanderings that the team at Bennington, Vermont, was a pretty speedy aggregation and claimants of the title for eastern New York and southern Vermont, they opened negotiations with them which resulted in the promise of the latter to meet the locals after the close of their season, some time in April, in this city. Undoubtedly the game will be a good drawing card.

Not under the school name but as an independent team the lasses are to journey to Beacon a week from Saturday to meet the town team of that place most of whom do not attend school but who are good basketball players, having beaten the Kingston team before. The regular quintet will be augmented by several ex-school girls about town.

Financial Report of A. A.

Alfred Schmid, treasurer of the Athletic Association, has posted his report of the transactions since the start of school in the fall. It shows the relative earning power of the Midget, Girls' and Varsity basketball teams together with the sums spent by each. The girls were the best money-makers, earning a total of $76.01 from their games; the Midgets follow with $69.96; and the Varsity, supposedly the best drawing team of all, bring up the rear with earnings of $28.10. True to nature, the girls disposed of their funds with a lavish hand, their expenditures being $89.42, making a deficit of $13.41 in their account; the varsity spent $61.35, losing $33.25 thereby; the Midgets disposed of $40.79 and were the only self-supporting team, gaining $29.17. The apparent deficit in the accounts of the three teams was made up by the dues of the association members, amounting to $86.45. Besides the regular travelling expenses were the following: Instructress, $18; baseball supplies, $20.08; flowers, $1.50; old bills, $6.85; incidentals, $2.80—a total of $49.23. The balance left to start the baseball season is $19.73, which amount will be greatly swelled by the funds from the A. A. Minstrels.

SIGNIFICANCE OF MAINTENANCE

Greatest Part of Highway Expense Is For Construction.

BUSINESS METHODS NEEDED

There Should Be a Proper System of Road Maintenance, With Its Auxiliary System of Road Accounts and Financial Control—This Would Place Expenditures on a Sound Basis

The greatest part of the large annual expenditure for roads is for construction, writes E W James, chief of maintenance United States office of public roads, in the New York Evening Post. Another large part is spent in repairing worn out roads Very little is spent systematically for maintaining in good condition roads already built. The fact that it is usually impossible to separate expenditures for construction, repair and maintenance indicates the indifferent attitude of local officials toward maintenance What such indifference means should be thoroughly understood

The idea of building roads with bond money is a good one The arrangement can often be made to good business advantage and is a good device for making posterity share in the payment of a certain advantage that we bequeath to it But as usually practiced the arrangement of issuing bonds serves actually to shift all payment to posterity and to exhaust the proceeds of the sale in our own generation We are heavily discounting the future in road building, and unless some change is brought about, financial difficulties are sure to come that can be met only by heavy direct taxes that will have to be expended without any direct benefits

The first step toward remedying this condition is really a very simple one Every mile of improved road built by a county from any funds whatever should create a determinable annual liability against the annual road revenues of the county This liability is determined by a competent engineer as the probable annual cost of maintenance of that particular mile of improved road

Let us assume the case of a county having $10,000 annual road revenue under the maximum levy The county already has 300 miles of common dirt roads and is unable to keep them in good condition for $33 per mile because of the heavy traffic near the market towns So it plans to issue bonds and to construct gravel roads near the principal market towns or railroad points or centers of population The question is, How many miles of gravel road should the county build? The engineer advising the county studies the materials available and estimates that roads built with the best local gravel will cost $125 per mile annually to maintain To maintain the dirt roads at least $30 per mile should be allowed on 100 miles By a simple computation we find that fifty six miles of gravel road at $125 is $7,000, and 100 miles of dirt road is $3,000 and our $10,000 revenue is exhausted This is, then, the limit of such road that the county should construct

Our country governments are not so efficient as our city governments However honest county officials may be, however seriously they take their duties, they labor under a heavy burden of habit and custom that practically makes impossible any thorough, effective work by present methods

In 1914 the United States expended in all $249,655,067 for road work a quarter of a billion dollars, more than one third of the value of the 1915 cotton crop at 10 cents per pound If we would conserve this tremendous annual investment of public wealth in public works so that it may be cumulative in effect and not a dead annual charge for transportation, we must revise our methods of conducting road affairs, introduce proper supervision, proper business methods, and once and for all take roads out of local politics

The instrumentality for accomplishing these ends is a proper system of road maintenance with its auxiliary system of road accounts and financial control Such system will save the community from assuming an undue burden of fixed charges, will provide for the permanent and effective upkeep of the public property represented by the road system, will distribute the annual revenues where traffic and investment values demand, and not as sought by local politicians and will place the largest single item of public expenditure, that for public roads, on a business basis. The result will be that the huge investment of annual public revenues will have a cumulative value and the public property represented by that investment will be permanently conserved

We have no right to say that any good work is too hard for us to do

A Willful Woman

By OSCAR COX

It was in the reign of King Edward of England the fourth of that name that John Ochiltree a young farmer living in the county of Kent met a lass called Mary Griggs at a Maying and received a strong love for her He danced with her around the Maypole and looked at her languishing by but his modesty and the strength of his love tied his tongue so that he could say nothing to her

And so he danced and ogled and sighed and danced but never a word could he say to the girl

Mary had been keeping company with Richard Doyle a maker of armor but the moment he laid eyes on John Ochiltree He saw that she was lost to him in favor of his rival He drew away sadly thus leaving the field to the man who had supplanted him

The day after the Maying John waited for Mary to come out of her father's thatched cottage and joined her He managed to wish her good morning and said that the crops promised to be good and that one of his cows had calved but besides this he said nothing Mary was a girl of spirit and would not help him out She said to herself that he should talk to her like a man or she would have none of him He continued to show her by his expression that he was enamored of her and when he looked at her his eyes had a melancholy expression

Now as soon as John got away from her his tongue was unloosed and he could say what he liked He told his mother of his trouble and convinced her that it was impossible that he should tell Mary his love and ask her to marry him

Then said his mother Mary must propose to you

She will never do that sighed John

She must be made to My son wishes her for his wife and he must have her Besides Mary is a good girl and will have a good dowry I wish her for a daughter in law I have made up my mind that since you are unable to ask Mary to be your life she shall claim you for her husband

And how will you do that mother

Never mind so that I do it Women have to get through the world crushing our wits We are not to force our way so we have to in

Things went from bad to worse between John and Mary Determined to force him to declare himself she renewed her former suitor This he told Bill and so great was his hate that his mother feared he would do She went to Mary and told in her of John's condition and the risk begged her to do that which was expected of the sterner sex—ask John to be her husband Mary vowed that she would be no man's wife who had not the courage to ask her and though John might die she could not do it part for him

Not long after this a sheep belonging to neighbor was found in John Ochiltree's fold John was arrested for sheep stealing and thrown into prison

The lad has lost his mind for love of you said John's mother to Mary The lass was secretly troubled but told her head and said that a man who was afraid of a girl had no mind to lose

John was tried and convicted and sentenced to be hanged

Then Mary began to regret that she had refused to be persuaded But it was now too late She had driven John into insanity for she believed what his mother said or she had unintentionally bewitched him so that he had stolen a sheep She sat at home mourning her sad fate at losing a man so defective Johns mother brought a request from her son that Mary would be present at his execution Mary declared that she could not endure such a sight and would not go But she was at last persuaded to grant this last favor to a man she was now persuaded she had driven to the scaffold and on the morning of the hanging she went there with her lover's mother

A crowd was gathered around the culprit John was the rope around his neck had scaled a few steps of the ladder He stopped and seeing Mary below said to her

Mary save me

How can I do that John

It is the law that if one about to be hanged can be claimed in marriage by any woman he shall go free

Is that so Mary asked of the priest

If you claim this man in marriage before him

Oh Mary for the love of God have mercy on me

Save him whispered the culprit's mother

Mary hesitated Now she said as she let her hand fall

This seemed then seemed to relieve the tension of the bidder and the sheriff was about to swing him off when Mary cried

I claim this man in marriage

John was cut down and the lovers of which he one couldn't said the latter would not until death was immediately released from their bonds

Years after Mary told her children how sheep had driven her husband to the brink of insanity and how Mary thanked the Creator that she had saved a man's life that men have not the right to take

There's a wide variety of materials to meet practically every taste. Women who appreciate exclusiveness will be delighted with the garments, for they possess charming style features that do not appear in dresses ordinarily offered as "new and stylish at big price reductions."

WE WANT THE WOMEN OF KINGSTON TO SEE THESE DRESSES

Because they possess an air of aristocracy and refinement seldom if ever found in ready-to-wear apparel. They come in Crepe de Chine, Crepe de Meteor, Taffetas, Georgette Crepe, etc., in many pretty models, each with different style effects of its own particular feature of becomingness. FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Sleepy Time Story About the Early Life of a Forest Tree.

HOW THE SEED WAS PLANTED

Many of Its Comrades Had Planned In Advance What They Were Going to Do, but Most of Them Perished—Good Work of a Squirrel.

Well, said Uncle Ben to Little Ned and Polly Ann, tonight I am going to tell the story of

THE LITTLE ACORN.

Once there was a beautiful big oak tree It grew in the woods, and it was the only oak around there

The oak was lonely, and so when fall came and the little acorns went pattering to the ground each was anxious to hide in a nice, safe place, so that when spring came they might send up little green shoots and grow up to be oak trees themselves.

Each little acorn as it swung on its branch looked about carefully for a nice place in which to fall

"I'm going to drop right in the midst of that pile of leaves," said one "The leaves will keep me warm when the winds blow and the snows fall, as they say they do in the winter"

"I am going to fall in the midst of that bank of soft earth Then I can work my way down into the soil" said another acorn.

"I shall choose that marshy place over yonder," said a third acorn

Every acorn had something to say except a little thing that grew on the lower limb There wasn't much choice for him. By and by when the wind loosened his hold on the tree all he could do would be to fall on the rocks There he had little chance of finding a place in which to grow, and there, without a cover, the first frosts of winter would pinch him to death The other acorns did not even think it worth while to ask him where he meant to fall

One morning the biggest acorn gave a groan

"There's a squirrel coming up the tree" he said And the tree began to shake so that the squirrel could not climb up and steal the acorns The little gray squirrel had just got as far as the lower limb, and he grabbed the first acorn he could see and darted down the trunk with it He ran to the little hole he had dug in the ground and popped the acorn in But the squirrel did not bother going back to the tree that was so hard to climb.

After awhile the other acorns began to drop off, but the pile of leaves blew away and left that one to freeze. Another found the soil that looked so soft very hard to pierce, and a third rotted in the swamp

When the spring came the only one that was alive was the acorn which the squirrel had buried in his little cellar and forgotten to dig up

That acorn sent up a little green shoot which became a full sapling and in time an oak tree, the pride of the forest.

An Interesting Pair.

dogs and small dogs were there to be seen. Some won prizes and others did not, to the grief of their owners. Among the happy ones at the show was little Miss Iris de la Torre Bueno, whose Pekinese Alcchas Chum Chum, won a ribbon. Their pictures are here shown

Those Glees and Glums Again.

"Now," said the Glums, "it's a dark, rainy day, and we'll just make little girl and little boy dull and cross!"

"No, you won't," answered the Glees, who happened to overhear the conversation. "We're just on the way to the nursery ourselves, and we're going to remind them of a whole lot of merry, pleasant things to do!"—Philadelphia Record.

SPRING MILLINERY PRESENTATION

—AT THE—

Paris Millinery Shop!

MUSIC BY A KINGSTON ORCHESTRA ALL DAY
TO ADD INTEREST TO THIS FASHIONABLE EVENT!

Women of Kingston and Vicinity Cordially Invited!

Exquisite" is the word which most adequately describes our New Hats for Spring—"Exquisite" in the softness and delicacy of the materials—"Exquisite" in their vivid smart colorings—"Exquisite" in their simplicity of design and trimming — "Exquisite" in their beauty of line. We've marshalled together.

A Dazzling Array of Beautiful Hats

featuring in hundreds of remarkable originations every style fancy brought forward by foreign and American designers, among the latter our own clever experts.

Paris Brought to New York— New York Brought to Kingston!

While yet wielding the sceptre of authority, Paris no longer demands a personal pilgrimage of her subjects, but exports her ideas to New York, where they are left for execution. Why should the discriminating woman of Kingston find it necessary to do her buying in the metropolis? Each year, with the growth of The Paris Millinery Organization, the reason becomes less and less a good reason. We bring New York to Kingston. The best that New York has to offer is here at "The Paris," which fact will be practically demonstrated by a visit to our Opening Exhibition Saturday. There are not, nor will there be, the equal of our Hats in this city, nor will our prices be matched for equal qualities.

Come Saturday and See Hats That Are the Personification of Richness and Charm!

Admire effects showing the daring and skill exercised by the designers, colorists and milliners. The finished conceptions are tributes to the ingenuity and cleverness of the foremost American artists. Never in our experience has there been a more inviting Opening Display. There are scores of Hats for women to see, criticize and choose from if so inclined.

Come, Enjoy the Music, and View the Sort of Millinery That Will Measure Up to Your Easter Desires and Expectations

THE EFFECT OF GOOD ROADS

Increase the Value of Tillable Farm Lands.

RESULT OF ECONOMIC SURVEY

Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering Has Made a Study of the Effect of Improved Highways Upon Farm Lands in Certain Counties of Different States

To determine as far as possible the exact dollars and cents effect on a county of the improvement of bad roads specialists of the office of public roads and rural engineering of the department of agriculture made economic surveys in eight counties in each of the years from 1910 to 1915 inclusive.

This study of the increase in the values of farm lands in the eight counties reveals the rather interesting fact that following the improvement of the main market roads the increase in the selling price of tillable farm lands served by the roads has amounted to from one to three times the total cost of the improvements. The increase in values in those instances which were recorded ranged from 10 per cent to 80 per cent in Spottsylvania county, Va., from 95 to 114 in Dinwiddie county, Va., 40 to 80 in Lee county, Va., to 100 in Wise county, Va., 0 to 114 in Franklin county, N. Y., 0 to 100 in Dallas county, Ala., to 60 in Jefferson county, Miss., and from 0 to 100 in Maricopa county, Ariz. These counties of increase were based for the most part upon the territory within a distance of one mile on each side of the roads improved.

In Spottsylvania county careful record was made in 1909 of thirty-five farms located on the road selected for improvement. Of the seven farms sold in 1914, the prices finally paid show increases of from — to 110 per cent over the 1910 valuation. The average value after the road was improved was $38.81 per acre as compared with $17.81 previous to the improvement. In 1913 four transfers of farm land were on the basis of $30.11 per acre, whereas the properties were listed in 1910 at only $14.81 per acre. It appears that the farms sold in 1914 increased in value $25.00 or 80 per cent or from $21.11 to $41.10 per acre.

In Dinwiddie county, Va., the actual sale of forty-three farms, sold or offered for sale from 1909 to 1914, raised in price from $8.55 to $14 per acre after the roads were built, and from $21.05 to $41.10 per acre after the roads were completed.

In Lee county, Va., a study of eight representative farms located on roads showed that they increased in value from an average of $110 per acre before the improvement to $211 after the roads were improved. There were increases in valuation in other sections from $60 to $80 or even $100 per acre.

In Franklin county, N. Y., the figures seem to indicate that the change from earth, sandy and clay roads to bituminous macadam has increased land values from $30.00 per acre or about 100 per cent.

In Dallas county, Ala., careful records seemed to indicate that the road improvement has added at least $5 to each acre of land within a half mile of improved road. Tracts sold at from $8 to $15 per acre were sold again after the improvement at from $20 to $25 per acre.

In Jefferson county, Miss., the total assessed valuation of real property outside of the city was $2,777,746. This in part is due to the after road improvement to $3,850,800, or 38 per cent.

In Maricopa county, Ariz., careful study of sales and real estate records indicated that the improvement of roads has added from 15 to 100 per cent or at least $15 per acre to the value of land within one-half mile of improved road. This would give a total of $3,000,000 or more than twice the value of the bonds issued.

A Cent.

The habit of economizing the cent pieces [illegible] without hesitation or excuse. We have no pennies in our vicinity. At one time half of our sales were cornered, but now the half is spent the hundredth part of a dollar.

LUCKY STRIKE

It's toasted
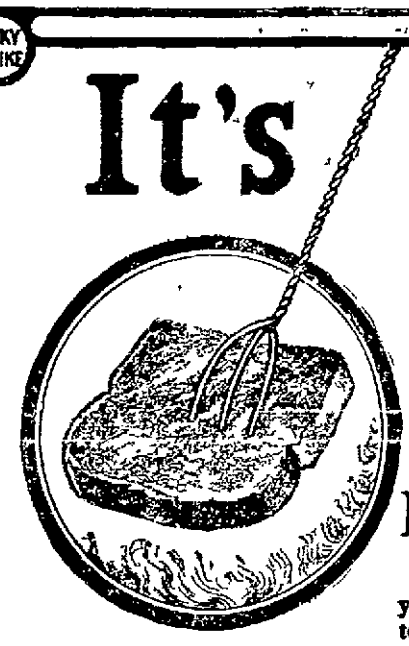
cigarette



IT'S toasted. The Burley tobacco in this delicious new Lucky Strike cigarette is toasted.

And you know how toasting does add flavor. Close your eyes and think of one crisp, brown slice of hot, buttered toast. Flavor is the word, isn't it?

This new application of an old idea has given you a new cigarette. You smokers have certainly been wanting a ready-made Burley cigarette. At first it couldn't be made; flavor didn't hold. But five years' study brought us to the toasting principle, by which we are able to hold the Burley flavor.

So now, try Lucky Strike, the real Burley cigarette, the tobacco — it's toasted. And the flavor — you'll certainly love it!

Central Hudson Line Expect to Get Through to Rondout at That Time —Ice Still Holds in River.

The ice in the Hudson river at this point is still holding, although in spots it is badly rotted by the warm weather, and the only open water is the track of the Transport which is making regular trips encountering no difficulty since trips for the season were resumed. The upper creek ice is also holding but the lower Rondout creek from a point near the Island Dock is open to the mouth.

With the ice still holding in the river the Cornell line is not getting any tugs ready to go into commission as yet. The tug Rob at the present time is the only tug ready to go out, and has been used to break up the creek ice. At the Central Hudson line office today it was stated that it was expected to have a boat through to Rondout some time next week unless unforeseen conditions arose. Just what boat of the line will make an effort to get through at that time is not known.

ULSTER FRUIT THE FINEST.

Mohican Enterprise a Liberal Education to Home Folks.

Ulster county fruit is being exhibited and sold by the Mohican Company in its Wall street store and, in color and taste, is far superior to the celebrated Hood river and other Pacific coast orchard products, the same as was demonstrated at the Panama-Pacific Expositions where J. A. Hopworth and Son of Milton, carried off five premiums in the nation-wide apple competition. At the State Fruit Growers' Association eastern meeting in Poughkeepsie last month, this same grower and others of Ulster county carried off the honors. Ninety-eight per cent of the fruit exhibited there was purchased by the Mohican people and the local sale is a liberal education for Ulster county consumers of the beauties and fine qualities of our home-grown fruit. The Hudson valley fruit standard is fast coming into its own with discriminating buyers of apples and a few more years will see the Hudson valley mark at the top of the heap.

Quiet in Recorder's Court.

After a lively session all week in recorder's court things simmered down, and today Recorder Lang found a clean docket awaiting him when he convened court this morning, as no cases were brought to his attention by the police, and not even a complaint was lodged with him. Those who have followed the happenings of court are of the impression that the fact that lately Recorder Lang has been sending so many to the pen at Albany has had something to do with things being quiet as none of the local talent has any love for the pen where they are forced to work. As one old offender has often said, "Give me six months in the county jail instead of one week in the Albany pen."

Musical Comedy This Evening.

"When Dreams Come True," which appears at the Kingston Opera House tonight, is the first musical comedy written by Philip Bartholomae, the author of "Little Miss Brown," "Over Night," and "Very Good Eddie." The comedy appeared at the opera house about a year and a half ago and is pleasantly recalled by everyone who saw that performance. The chorus numbers twenty-four exceptionally handsome and shapely young girls, who act as a background for the principals and wear some of the most stunning gowns ever shown on the musical comedy stage.

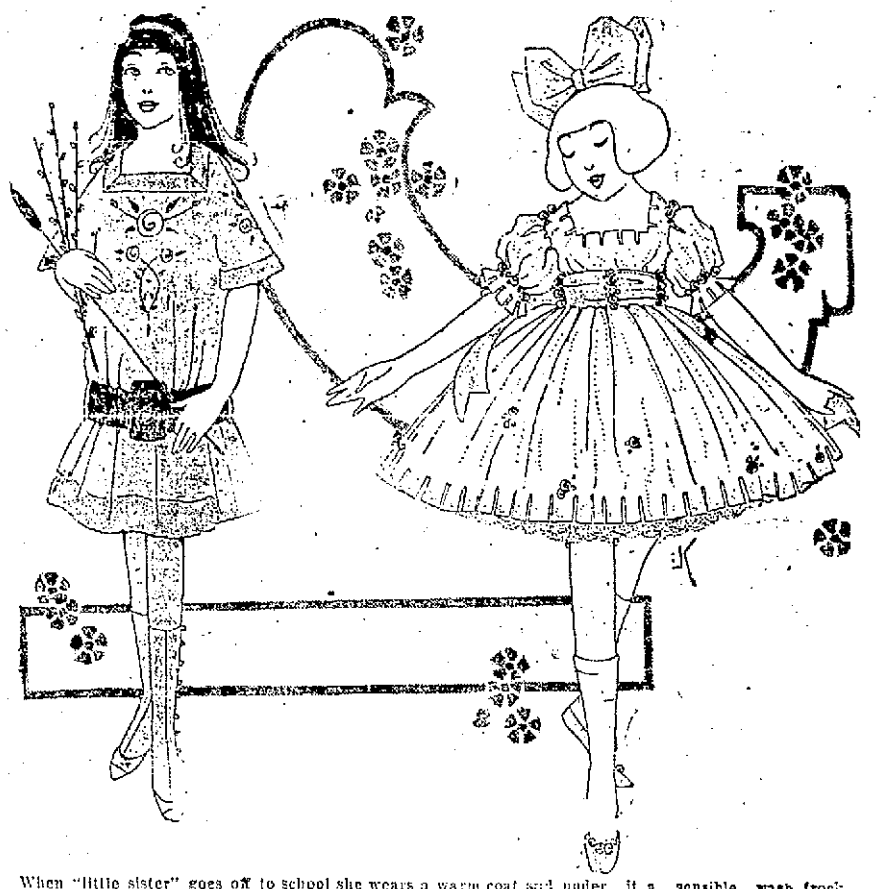
Another "Flash Signal" Story.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 16.—The navy department today denied two interned German sailors were shot by American sentries at the Philadelphia navy yard when suspected of signalling with flashes. It was explained that the supposed flashes were caused by the sentry pacing up and down in front of the lighted portholes of one of the German ships.

Improvements at County Jail.

Sealed bids are being solicited for the repair of the toilets and other work in the Ulster county jail, and plans and specifications are on file at the office of the clerk of the board of county auditors at the court house. Bids will be opened at the office on the evening of April 5.



When "little sister" goes off to school she wears a warm coat and under it a sensible wash frock, which she may be permitted to "muss up" with right good will. The dress is of brown linen of that soft shade called "cafe-au-lait," cut in one straight piece like the chemise frocks of the grown ups, and it is broadly girdled at the waist by a brown suede belt, whose rich, dark shade just matches the bands which finish hem and neck and sleeves.

A very dress-up "party frock" is this. And yet deft fingers may fashion it at little expense. Kate Greenaway would not have disowned the little costume of white net over pale pink lawn or china silk. The puffed sleeves end in flaring cuffs cut in deep squares like those which finish hem and neck. A blue ribbon sash is held on the band of tiny rosebuds, and, if mother chooses, rosebuds may be scattered lavishly all over the frock.

Rounded Corners Popular.

Rounded corners at road intersections are made at all important crossroads and at the junctions of all roads where the traffic is sufficiently heavy to warrant it in Crawford county, Ia. This practice, according to the service bulletin of the Iowa state highway commission, is regarded with so much favor by the farmers that they donate the land required for extra width in the right of way.

Donkeys In Trousers.

The stranger in Guayaquil, in Ecuador, at once remarks one very curious feature of its life and general appearance. We are used to seeing nets over our horses in the summer, but such an outfit as is required by the donkeys in the tropics strikes the stranger as ludicrous. The donkeys are numerous in the city and are used for all manner of load purposes, from baskets of fruit to the carcasses of butcher's meat. In the morning a string of them may be seen trotting through the streets with a load of fresh meat from the slaughter house, which is situated outside the town. The donkeys are all provided with coverings around the fore legs, like ordinary trousers, and with a protection over the ears against the mosquitoes. The Guayaquil donkey presents a most comical appearance in trousers, especially if his garment is embroidered, as it sometimes is.

CLAY LODGE LEADS PINOCHLE LEAGUE

C. S. Clay Lodge of Odd Fellows still leads in the Odd Fellows' Pinochle League of the city with Aretas Lodge a close second. Games in the league are scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and the interest is keen with all four lodges hoping to be in the lead before the season closes on March 28, when the winners will be tendered a dinner by the losers.

This pinochle contest between the local Odd Fellow lodges has now become an annual event. Captain Jacob Post of Clay Lodge is positive that his experts will retain the lead, but Captain Ray Whitbeck of Kosciusko Lodge and Captain David Bush of Aretas Lodge are banking on the new style of play that they have been developing.

Captain Bush is not only studying out new plays, but he is busy perfecting new combinations and when not experimenting on other Odd Fellows he is springing some new dope on the letter carriers at the post office. Judge McKenzie of the Port Ewen Lodge states that while his team may now be in last place that they will soon climb out of the cellar.

The standing in the Pinochle League to date follows:

BRILLIANT FINISH OF FASHION SHOW

Actors Scored Even Greater Hit in Second Production—Send-off for Bridal Party—Charitable Institutions to Benefit.

A packed house on Thursday afternoon and full houses on Thursday evening brought the Van Wagenen Fashion Show and Benefit to a most successful close, from every viewpoint. The actors, having gained confidence by the Wednesday afternoon's performance, that of Thursday was even better than on the preceding day. A few additional gowns or handsome design and texture were shown, as were numerous elegant separate coats and hats for older women. One thing is sure, the Fashion Show has set the spring and summer standard for the best dressed women of this city, who will find at the Van Wagenen store, not only all of the very stylish and handsome garments and hats shown at the Fashion Show, but many others of equal elegance, especially for the matrons and women who have passed their twentieth birthday.

A few changes were also made in the program of music, which opened and closed, as on Wednesday, with the exceedingly graceful and winsome dancing of Miss Margaret Richards, in "A Dance of the Blue Bells," and of Miss Agnes Dorsey in the oriental "Nautch Veil Dance." Miss Stern, soprano soloist, again delighted the audience with her singing, and charm of personality, her rendition of "A May Morning" by Denza, being remarkably fine. As Mr. Dodge was unable to be present on Thursday, Thomas Crosby, pianist, acted most acceptably and efficiently as accompanist to Miss Stern and also to Harry Clearwater, bass, who most graciously, at the eleventh hour sang in place of Mr. La Tour, who had developed a distressing cold in the throat. Mr. Clearwater sang "The Sunshine of Your Smile," by Cooke, and "The Song of Steel" by Spross, the rich quality of his voice and the excellence of his musicianship—he, too is a pupil of Mrs. Hemstreet—being admirably displayed in both numbers which were heartily encored. In the "Rondino" by Kreisler, and the "Simple Confession" by Thome, Earle Hummel violinist, showed a finish and beauty of executions and perfection of tone, that might well have been the envy of many a now noted concert violinist.

The orchestra, too added some of the very latest music, just received from New York, to their afternoon and evening repertoire.

A few impromptu innovations in the playlet made decided hits with the audience. In the afternoon, Kenneth Archer's toy Boston bull dog came to the afternoon tea, and plainly showed himself to the thoroughly accustomed to high social life, while the young ladies all vied with each other in looking for "Trouble," and giving him a welcome.

In the evening, the audience was given a surprise in the appearance among the wedding guests, of an elderly but distinguished appearing gentleman and lady, who proved to be E. F. MacFadden, the head of the L. H. Van Wagenen Company, and Mrs. C. N. Reed, who had arranged the musical program of the Fashion Show.

The wedding scene was further enlivened by the sudden disappearance of the bride and groom, whose baggage, in the meantime had been appropriately "decorated." The entire performance closed with the return of the bridal couple in traveling costume, which was the signal for a storm of confetti, and a grand rush for safety from the hands of the admiring friends.

Incidentally it was hoped that the audience took in the latest "finger" hand shake, which has socially superceded the "pump handle style," and which was introduced by Mr. Richards, who so successfully staged the entire production. Also it should be noted that a gold-mounted lorgnette from the Safford jewelry store on Wall street gives a decided "air" to the user. Too much praise cannot be given to the participants in the performance, Mrs. Jane Crosby Telfer, as "Dame Fashion;" Kenneth E. Archer, as "A Man of the Hour;" the Misses Caroline Oppenheimer, Winifred Smith, Anna Roach, Margaret Dorsey, Edith Gakenheimer, Nina Smith, Mabel Barber, Frances Costello, Clara Gilbert, Mildred Van Wert, Ruth Terwilliger, Olive Clearwater, Stela McNeis, Lillian Hermann, Leona Grant, Agnes Dorsey, Margaret Richards, Mrs. Spencer, Hazel Newkirk of Weehawken, Miss Charlotte Haley of Saugerties, Miss Blanche Dibbell of Tannersville; Messrs. Russell Dana, Ray Everett, Alton Miller, Walter Baisden, Alexander Radie and John Cashin, all guests of Dame Fashion; the Misses Mary Forde and Vola Berryan, the maids, for the whole-hearted and most efficient manner in which they entered into the spirit of the occasion, making of it such a success and therefore such financial aid to the Woman's Auxiliaries of the Kingston City Hospital, the Benedictine Sanitarium and the Y. M. C. A. In counting up the successes of the entertainment, mention should also, most gratefully be made of the untiring and efficient services of all those young women and men, who behind the scenes made possible the rapid changes of attire and stage setting, for without their aid the smoothness of the production would have been impossible.

It is known that a goodly sum has been realized for the auxiliaries, but the exact sum will not be known for a day or two. A contribution of $5 from Mrs. J. T. Maxwell of Saugerties for the "Cause" is hereby gratefully acknowledged.

Fun With the Wrong Man

What Might Have Been a Serious Blunder Comes Out Right

By WILL S. GIDLEY

Copyright by Will S. Gidley.

On that day the Argus staff had had an unusually trying time of it. To begin with, the press dispatches had consisted chiefly of Russian war news, which had been pouring in steadily all day, filled with an unusual and most discouraging quantity of unpronounceable and unspellable names—that is, to any one except an expert in Russian and Asiatic nomenclature. To an ordinary editor, proofreader or typesetter they were simply so many jagged mountain chains of consonants, with an occasional vowel thrown in for good measure. To cap the climax one of the hand set columns got knocked into "pi" just as the paper was about ready for the press, which made a great improvement in the spelling of some of the names, but ruined the article in other respects.

The result was—well, the Argus got out about on time, but as managing editor of the paper Barney Blake had no reason to feel proud of that particular column of war news as it appeared in print. Some of it was still pi, but it came out all right in the second edition, also in the third and fourth. Blake saw to that personally, as he expected Colonel Starbuck, the proprietor of the Daily Argus, in some time during the afternoon, and, knowing him to be of an excitable temperament—the colonel often swore the Argus with its blunders would be the death of him—he did not care particularly to have him see that dispatch as originally printed.

The colonel failed to show up at the usual hour, however, and Barney was rather glad than otherwise that he didn't.

What he needed—in fact, what the entire Argus staff needed just then—was a little wholesome recreation instead of an interview with or a lecture from Colonel Starbuck—something to take off the tension instead of screwing it up tighter.

It is no wonder, then, that when an unexpected opportunity for innocent fun presented itself Barney joyfully and eagerly seized upon it and made the most of it.

The opportunity in question came in the shape of a caller—one of the oddest looking fish that had drifted into the Argus office in many moons.

One quick glance at the linen duster which hung loosely about his robust form and the last year's straw hat perched on the back of his head, and Barney had sized him up for a horny handed agriculturist—probably one of the country subscribers coming in, as they frequently did, to look over the

THE OPPORTUNITY CAME IN THE SHAPE OF A CALLER.

Argus establishment and see the modus operandi of getting out a daily newspaper.

"Hello, Uncle Horace! Looking for any one in particular?" saluted Blake as the man with airy toga and out of date headgear paused inside the door way and glanced inquiringly around the room.

"How did you happen to light on to me, 'cos-no men before I even opened my trapdoor?' queried the caller whimsically. "I always heard the Argus had a mighty smart staff, and now I know it. Reckon you must be the—er—society editor, eh?"

"No; I'm only the managing editor," explained Barney. "The society editor is the chap in the corner with the chrysanthemum hair and a rose in his buttonhole. You will also recognize him by the diamond ring that flashes on his 'write' hand as he dashes off his eloquent and sparkling society bonmots and his fascinating description of Mrs. Brown's colonial ball, Mrs. O'Rafferty's French fete, Mrs. Robinson's Italian musicale or Mrs. John Q. Smith's Japanese lawn party. Oh, he's a genius—our society editor."

"You don't say!"

"Yes. The paper simply couldn't exist without him."

"That so? Queer Colonel Starbuck never told me anything about him," mused the caller.

"Oh, you know the colonel, do you?" asked Blake.

"Yes, we're what I might call slightly acquainted. I had a little business transaction with him the other day."

"Sold you a gold brick, I suppose," and Barney winked humorously at the rest of the staff.

"Don't know yet whether it will turn out to be a gold brick or not. Reckon I shan't worry any if it does. I've invested in gold bricks before, and the way I figure it it's nobody's business but my own if I do it again."

"Oh, I see," said Barney smoothly. "A trifle touchy on the gold brick question, eh, Mr.—er—Hayseed, is it?"

"Not quite. Hayden happens to be my name. Didn't make quite as slick a guess as you did on the Horace. But go ahead and call me Hayseed if you like. You can remember that name better than Hayden probably, and I guess it fits me about as well as the other, anyhow. Don't it strike you that way?"

"Oh no, you're no hayseed! You're right from Chicago or New York city—anybody could tell that from the cut of your jib!" And Barney again passed the wink to the others, who all felt in duty bound to roar at the managing editor's wit.

"Nice, genial staff you've got. Chuck full of fun, ain't they? I hope they're not laughing at me. Hain't got a 'Please Kick Me' sign pinned to my back, have I?"

"That's all right, Uncle Horace," purred Barney. "Don't go to getting excited. The boys are just spelling for a little fun—been working under steam pressure today—but none of them would ever be guilty of—er—by George, they have, just the same! But it doesn't read, 'Please Kick Me,' it says, 'We're From the Farm.' And if I only knew the deep dyed villain who pinned it on you I'd discharge him this instant—yes, sir, this very instant—and I'd tell him not to come around again until tomorrow morning," he added in a stage whisper as he stepped around behind the rural looking visitor and removed the offending sign, deftly replacing it by another handed him by one of the crowd, reading, "Turnips For Sale."

"There; that looks better," observed Barney, at which everybody roared promptly once more.

"Not quite so much levity, boys," said Barney reprovingly. "I am going to show our friend here through the Argus establishment, and I want to see how well you can behave while"—

Biff!

A big wad of paper came sailing across the office and caromed on the ear of the caller.

"That was our baseball editor who did that," explained Barney coolly. "Force of habit, I suppose. He probably imagined he was throwing a ball at first base. Don't let that happen again, Higgins."

"All right, sir," glibly responded the young man who had thrown the paper. "Mistake, anyhow. I was aiming at the wastebasket."

"Well, seeing you're apologized, it is all right," said Barney, with mock solemnity.

"Now, Mr. Hayseed—I should say Hayden—you have already been introduced to our baseball and society editors, and if you will cast your optics over the rest of the collection of geniuses before you I will enlighten you as to their duties, so that when you go back to the farm you will understand the secret of the Argus' success in gathering and disseminating the daily news of the entire world, including the city and county of Roomopolis.

"The exceedingly tall, thin young man with the short hair and prominent ears is Mr. Perkins, our secret service reporter and war correspondent. His build, as you will notice, fits him admirably for the position. He is so thin he can crawl over a transom without the slightest difficulty."

"You don't say!"

"Fact, I assure you. And that is why a thin man has a marked advantage over a 200 pounder. It requires less gas to carry him, and if he falls from a balloon it doesn't muss him up so much as it would a fat man, thereby effecting a big saving in doctors' bills for repairing broken ribs, etc."

"I see. Quite an idea, that."

"Yes, and, besides, a thin man occupies less space and leaves more room in the basket of the balloon for the wireless message apparatus. You see, as fast as the war correspondent in a balloon gets a message ready to send in to the paper he grinds it out on a wireless sending machine, something like a phonograph, and it goes flying off into space until it strikes the Aerial Wireless Telegraph line, over which it whizzes through the air with almost lightning speed until it reaches the Argus office. It would do you good to see our office boy catching the messages in a wire basket as they come flying in at the window."

"Well, well!"

"Oh, I tell you there is a pile to learn about the newspaper business when a fellow once sets about it. Now, I rather imagine you've learned a few things in that line today, Mr. Hayseed—I mean Hayden—that you never knew before."

"I reckon I have picked up just a few stray hints about the newspaper business," drawled the man in the linen duster, and then he suddenly straightened up, and the awkward countryman of a moment before was transformed into something quite different as he went on in crisp, businesslike tones: "Exceedingly valuable ones, too, most of them. Now, seeing I have been running a newspaper myself for the past fifteen years, I had a glimmering sort of an idea when I drifted in here today that possibly I knew something about the business, but I find I was mistaken. I'm only a jibbering idiot in the newspaper business, from the Argus standpoint, and, having bought the paper, I've got to start in at the bottom and learn the trade all over again from its highly accomplished and courteous staff. Good joke on me, Mr. Blake, isn't it?"

Barney—not to mention the rest of the Argus staff—looked as if it would be a great relief to him at that moment if the earth were to open and swallow up the entire establishment.

"W-why—er—who—who are you?" he stammered uneasily.

"I? Oh, I'm nobody much. I'm only Uncle Horace, the old hayseed that dropped in on you a few minutes ago to take lessons in journalism and the art of entertaining callers. But here comes Colonel Starbuck. Perhaps I can get him to introduce me. How are you, colonel? A trifle late in keeping your appointment, aren't you?"

"Why, how d'ye do, major?" exclaimed Colonel Starbuck cordially. "I am sorry I've kept you waiting, but it has given you a chance to learn something about the Argus establishment and the staff."

"W-WHY—ER—WHO—WHO—ARE YOU?" HE STAMMERED UNEASILY.

"Yes, it has," interposed the caller dryly.

"Pretty bright looking crowd, major, aren't they? Boys, this is Major Hayden, the former owner and editor of the Centerville Courier. He has bought out my interests in the Argus, taking possession at once, and I trust the new relationship between you as employer and"—

"Hello! What has been going on here? What is that sign you are carrying around on your back, major? Here, let me remove it. 'Turnips For Sale,' eh? I surely hope that miserable attempt at wit was not placed on your back by any one connected with this establishment."

"I am afraid it was, colonel," was the calm reply. "You see, the boys mistook me for one of your rural subscribers, and they have been having some amusement at my expense. But I see they are pretty well worked up over it, so perhaps we had better finish our interview in your private office and give our humorous friends a chance to think the matter over quietly by themselves."

Half an hour later when the new proprietor of the Argus emerged from the inner sanctum he found a rather solemn looking crowd awaiting his appearance, and Barney Blake's erstwhile smiling countenance was the most sepulchrally solemn of them all as he stepped forward and gravely handed him a folded document.

Opening it, Mr. Hayden read as follows:

Major Hayden:

Dear Sir—We have had our laughs, and it is now your turn. As the future proprietor of the Daily Argus you doubtless will not care to retain in your employ the staff of long eared, unmitigated donkeys now connected with the paper, and we herewith hand you our resignations, to take effect immediately, together with our apologies for the unpardonable treatment received by you at our hands this afternoon.

This note was signed by Managing Editor Blake and the other members of the Argus staff, and below the signatures was the following postscript:

P. S.—The boys were bound to share the blame equally with myself, and hand in their resignations with mine, but as I am the head o' the office and the others took their cue from me I feel that I alone should shoulder the responsibility for what occurred, and as an act of justice to my fellow employees I ask that my resignation alone be accepted and that no one else shall be made to suffer for my fault. The rest of the boys are a pretty good lot. They will serve you faithfully and redeem themselves in your eyes, I am sure, if you will give them a chance. Yours respectfully,

BARNEY BLAKE.

"Resignations declined with thanks! You are all going to stick right to your jobs until I tell you different," announced Major Hayden bluntly as he finished reading the above communication and, tearing it into strips, dropped it into the wastebasket. "You've had your lesson, boys, and I guess there isn't much danger of any more such exhibitions as we have had here this afternoon. I'm willing to try you anyhow.

"But I'm glad you added that postscript, Mr. Blake," he concluded, reaching over and giving Barney's hand a hearty shake. "It has a manly ring to it, and I reckon we'll get along together all right."

WHITMAN SIGNS TWO LOCAL BILLS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, March 16.—(Special)—Governor Whitman today signed two bills introduced by Senator Walton and affecting Ulster county. One authorizes the town of Gardiner to issue bonds to the amount of $9,000 to pay the town's indebtedness to the county, on account of taxes cancelled and rejected by the state comptroller and to pay the town's expenses incurred in the proceedings in supreme court to assess New York city property in the township.

The second bill authorizes a bond issue in the town of Shawangunk for similar purposes.

UNANIMOUS FOR RETURN OF PASTOR

The last quarterly conference of the St. James M. E. Church was held Thursday evening and was largely attended, nearly every member being present. It has been a year of harmony and prosperity. The reports of the work of the pastor, Sunday school, Epworth League, Senior and Junior Ladies' Aid Societies, Woman's Foreign and Woman's Home Missionary Societies, and Queen Esther Circle were all of a most encouraging character. Altogether it has been the best year in the history of St. James's for a long period, both financially and in adding to the membership. Notes have been wiped out and all bills paid, while unity and peace prevail.

The action of the official board in inviting Dr. Baragwanath to return was most enthusiastically inforced, and the district superintendent, Dr. R. E. Bell, who presided, was requested by a rising vote to use his influence with the bishop to have the unanimous request of St. James's Church granted—the return of the pastor. Both pastor and the church are to be congratulated.

The stewards and committees were elected for another year. W. F. Dedrick was elected delegate to the Layman's Association, and D. G. Atkins, reserve. The New York Conference will be held in the Washington Square Church, New York city, where Dr. Baragwanath was formerly pastor. The conference will meet April 4 and will be presided over by Bishop L. B. Wilson, who was the president of the conference held in St. James's Church this city five years ago.

MEDIATION MAY PREVENT STRIKE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 16.—Secretaries Lane, Wilson and President Willard of the Baltimore and Ohio and Samuel Gompers immediately will confer as mediators in the railroad situation.

RAILROADS ARE REFUSING FREIGHT

Passenger Service on O. & W. and West Shore May Also be Affected by the Strike, if a Strike Comes.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Cleveland, O., March 16.—The New York Central, Nickel Plate, Baltimore and Ohio and Erie railroads late today declared embargoes on all freight. Their freight offices were instructed to receive no freight for shipment after midnight.

The New York Central today notified all big shippers that until further notice no freight would be received at Rhinecliff. At the freight house of the West Shore it was stated that there was a partial embargo, the railroad refusing to accept perishable goods. If the railroad outlook remains serious it is likely that the West Shore will refuse to accept any freight but up to this afternoon had not received any orders. The O. & W., which uses the same terminal as the West Shore at Weehawken, have given notice that, owing to the yardmen probably being involved in the strike, all train service will, including passenger trains, be uncertain and trains may be annulled without notice.

Court Takes a Recess.

At noon today court took a recess until Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when the Geiger-Divine case will be continued. Already a large number of witnesses have been sworn and there are still several more to be called by the defense. When the case was begun it was thought that two or three days would be required to get in all of the testimony but since the case started a number of new developments have caused counsel to prolong their examination of the witnesses.

In hundreds of Kingston's homes—regardless of creed or class—Good Bread has become the food staple. The "high cost of living" is compelling the multitudes to understand that Good Bread is in the long run the best, cheapest and most nutritious food the housewife can place upon the table.

GREEN MT. GIRLS TO PLAY IN CITY

K H S Talent Arrange Game With Bennington Aggregation—Season Nears End With Montpelier Rhinebeck and Midgets Games

The basketball season at the high school will just about wind up Saturday when the Midgets and the varsity play their last games at Albany and Montpelier respectively The girls are to play at Rhinebeck on that date and besides have scheduled a post season contest with the Bennington Vt high school champions of southern New England and northern New York who will meet the locals in this city some time in April

Championship games seem to be the hobby of the Midgets Their Albany opponents Saturday will be the Cathedral Academy Midgets who number among their conquered scalps those of the Christian Brothers Academy also of Albany This latter team defeated the local Midgets in a championship game in this city some time ago and so the Cathedral boys are now in possession of the title for eastern New York With the hope of capturing the coveted laurels from them the locals are to make an onslaught on this fast team with the firm resolve to bring back the spoils their ranks making up to put none of the players being ineligible because of low marks

The varsity's last game of the year will be one of the hardest of Montpelier's playing is of the same standard as that shown here in the first contest between the two to mix a few weeks ago The visitors displayed the best form of any visiting team in Kingston this year and made the locals hustle to get the verdict though the court was unfamiliar to them The guard work of the Montpelier five will be weakened by the ineligibility of Hallinan whose bunk will be taken by one of the Wilsons Treadwell or Williams

Lest they get contemptuous by suddenly quitting the game after their stiff session the girls decided to ease up gradually and clinch more strongly the valley championship by engaging with the Rhinebeck maidens on their own soil Saturday afternoon The locals have won both of the former encounters

As publicity agents for spreading the name of the high school about the sporting world the girls should be awarded the ribbon Having heard in their wanderings that the team of Bennington Vermont was a pretty speedy aggregation and claimants of the title for eastern New York and southern Vermon they opened negotiations with them which resulted in the promise of the latter to meet the locals after the close of their season some time in April in this city Undoubtedly the game will be a good drawing card

Not under the school name but as an independent team the lasses are to journey to Boston a week from Saturday to meet the town team of that place most of whom do not attend school but who are good basket ball players having beaten the Kingston team before The regular team will be augmented by several ex school girls about town

Alfred Shadd treasurer of the Athletic Association has posted his report of the transactions since the start of school in the fall It shows the relative earning power of the Midget Girls and Varsity basketball teams together with the sums spent by each The girls were the best money makers earning a total of $ 6 01 from their games the Midgets follow with $61 36 and the Varsity supposedly the best drawing team of all bring up the rear with earnings of $ 8 10 Prior to entering the girls disposed of their funds with a lavish hand their expenditures being $89 13 making a deficit of $17 11 in their account the varsity spent $61 losing $32 25 thereby the Midgets disposed of $40 79 and were the only self supporting team gaining $ 1 17 The apparent deficit in the account of the three teams was made up by the dues of the association totalling to $50 Besides the regular traveling expenses were the following Instructress $15 baseball supplies $ 0 05 flowers $1 50 old bills $ 5 incidentals $2 80 a total of $49 7 The balance left to start the baseball season is $11 17 which amount will be easily swelled by the funds from the A A Minstrels
